

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

4 boly 7 256 J. 1386 ioogle

CHRYSAL:

OR, THE

ADVENTURES

GUINEA

Wherein are exhibited

VIEWS OF SEVERAL STRIKING SCENES,

WITH

Curious and interesting ANECDOTES of the most Noted Perfons in every Rank of Life, whose Hands it passed through,

IN AMERICA, ENGLAND, HOLLAND, GERMANY, and Portugal.

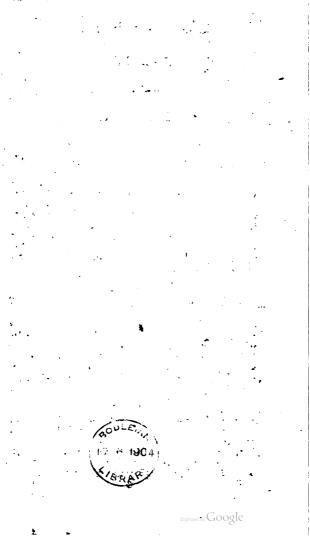

---Hold the Mirror up to Nature, To bow Vice its own image, Virtue its own Likenels, And the very Age and Body of the Times His form and Prefure. Qui capit ille facit.

By an ADEPT.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:

Printed for T. CAVELL, Bookfeller in the Strand. MDCCXCIV.

CONTENTS.

VOL. IV.

BOOK the FIRST.

CHAP. I.

Cbry/al continues the account of the members. The hifiory of a remarkable perfon is given for a remarkable purpole. His pleafures bring him into diffusi, from which he extricates himself by making them fublervient to his interest, and gets into a good keeping. Not content with the mother, he cafts his eye upon the daughter alfo, but is difappointed, and forged to take up with a fhare of her fortane, for procuring her in marriage for another. He refolves to be a great max and for that purpole breaks with his keeper, when he has got from her all the had to give. Page 13

CHÁP. IL

Continued. He begins his feheme fuccelsfully, by ficaling a marriage. His late hetper makes an artful demand of all the prefents the had given him, which he antwers as artfully. He advances in his feheme, by fleps exactly in his character, and gets into favour with a great perfon. Chryfal makes fome remarks on the origin of the affections of the human mind, and the different manner of breeding men, and borfes, with the confequence. 19

CHAP. III.

Continued. He practifies a fucceiful method for gaining the confidence of his new Patron, which he turns to good account. Hiftory of the lover who fucceeded him in the wood graces of his late herefor. He firives to prevent his taking advantage of his influence over her ; and finding he fails in that, fords him into diffrei, which Wet. IV.

CONTINTED

brings his life in his power. He flights many motives, which might have had weight with others, and takes advantage of the opportunity to get rid of him, and all farther trouble about him. He continues to dupe him. till the last moment when his eyes are opened, and all comes out.

CHAP. IV.

Continued. A view of his political character introduces a maxim not fufficiently strended to. He fails in a great firole, and doning for many, wrong edges, that he is kickthe dant of poster, and forced to be content, with profit, which the purface through shick, and this. An unhappy wrons given this the posteries of the wing his ingratiande to highere. Pharen, on the merit of which he sifes to thight power that forter, which he wildly exerts beind the curstain, and leaves his deal's the blame. I han incount of the juft fruits of the mash faces is conibled the sites.

CHAP. .W.

Coryfal leaves the convept. His maîter proceeds in character. He practices a new interior of courthip; and lignalizes his balents for interigue, by debautohing the daughbet of his falend. Her district, when teo late, yives him fone flight qualant of confidence; but he foon isesovers, and goes ha in his enterplace. 34

CHAR VL

Continued. Corifar mittet makes his triamph public, by feducing his new mittets away from her tomer's 'houfe. The manner in which he imposed upon them both to effect this, with the confolation he gave her for fome natural confequences of his gallantry. His triumph is completed by her going alion the town, and her father's breaking his heart. 38

CHAP. VII.

"Guryal" matter prop his court to a great perion, who is find not much to relia his humour, and expresses

GON TEXTS

fogie unfalhionable fentiments concerning, polite pleafores. In the course of a regular progretiion  $Chr_1/at$ comes into the possession of a Beau." Hittory of a Beau, wish a journal of his manner of life for one day. Chryfal changes his fervice, in a common way, for that of a lady of fashion. 42

CHAR. VIII.

History of Chryfal's new mistress. She is brought int? difteels by her beauty, from which a lucky interview relieves her. The danger of arguing in favour of inclination against reason. Her friend puts her to fchool to learn manners, and afterwards marries her. His fag mily thew impotent refentment, at which he is fo enraged that he makes his will, by which he leaves her his whole fortune; and then dies. An uncommon infance of the good nature of the world. 49

CHAP. IX.

The common confequence of overdoing things. Her huf-band's relations find out a flaw in his will. The comfort of having good lawyers to keep up a client's fpirits. .For the advantage of having two fixings to her bow, the enters into an cugagement of marriage, under an beavy penalty. The event of her law-fuit shews the prudence of this precaution. She is caft ; her lover flies off, and the fues him for the penalty of his engagement. He begs the money among his friends, and then by a nice sneffe plays her own game back upon her, and flings her off with half. Chryfal changes his fervice, 59

CHAP. X.

bry/al makes fome out-of-the-way remarks on matrimony. Description and hiftory of his new master. Chryfal vindicates his uting a common expression. His ma-fter's first rife from a beggar to a foot-boy. He gains his mafter's favour, of which he makes the use natural to be expected from his first education. Some account of a relation of his principal's. The danger of giving advice. . Chryfolis maller infinuates himlelf into the A 2 Colonel's

CONTENTS

Colone P's liking, and undermines his principal, in his regard.

CHAP. XI.

Further account of the Colonel. Cbryfal's mafter, in conjunction with a female affociate proper for his purpole, completes his facement of alienating the Colonel's regard from his family, of which he gives a proof of a most extraordinary nature. A remarkable influence of Cbryfal's mafter's talents for a particular kind of wit, with a firking account of the worthy manner in which he and his fair affociate acquitted themfelves of the truft respectively. Solution of the colonel. 63

CHAP. XIL

Chryfal's matter receives an account of the death of the Colonel. He finds after much deliberation that he cannot fling his worthy affociate out of the whole spoil, and therefore prudently refolves to thare it with her by a marriage, of which he draws a comfortable picture. He urges his fuit, and the firives to evade it by arguments confiftent with both their characters. He carries his point, in a particular manner. 73

CHAP. XIII.

Account of the methods which Cbry/al's mafter took to obviate the effects of his principal's refeatment, with the characteriftic convertation that paffed between them, on the former's avowing the Colonel's will. Cbry/al's mafter over-fhoots his mark, and provokes his principal to do more than he ever intended. An uncommon inftance of the juffice of the world. Cbry/al's mafter obliges the lady to court him in her turn, and at length marries her. The confequences of fuch a marriage, and fruits of the fuccels of all their fchemes. 78

CHAP. XIV.

Cbryfal's mafter defigns to fet up a coach; but wants a material article toward making a proper figure with it. He comfults with an Herald, who gives him an elaborate  The differentiation not the most pleafing to hist, on conts.
of arms, and the modern methods of making them, in which he unfolds many curious multeries, and undertakes at haft, on proper encobragement, to make him.
a gentleman. Chryfal changes his forvice. Converfation between his new mafter and an Antiquarian. Gunious arguments, by which he proves the genuinenels and importance of certain relics of antiquity. Chryfal changes his fervice.

CHAP. XV.

A modeft mothod of feeking fame. Chryfal's mafter confirms himfelf in his refolution to gratify sh uncommon curiofity, by a great example. The judicious and learned manner in which he chaffed and entered his new acquifitions. (Carlous romark on the value of books. He goes to an auditon, where he makes an extendatory purchafe. Chryfal changes his fervice for that of the Austioner. Spechaen and effects of his new mafter's elequence, learning, and judgmont. 93.

CHAR XVI.

An unfavoury accident ftops him fhort in his harangue. He turns off the jeft with another, and accounts learnedly for what has happened. The real caufe and confequence of that accident. Reflections on succionsering, and the caufes of its faces.

CHAP. XVR.

Chryfal's malter is vifited by a Connoiffeur, to whom he gives a fliort receipt how to make his pictures fell, and makes fome firiking remarks on the difregard people flew for their families, which fend his vifitor away in a huff.

CHAP, XVIIL

Gry[a]: maker receives an agreeable fummons. His en-, cominms on the generofity of merchants, an account of the way many of them acquire reputation for tafte and independ. He meets the merchant, who confults him  $A_3$  on on z different branch of his bufinels, from that which he espected. Cbry/al's mafter, in order to encourage his cultomer, gives a large account of his own abilities, and opens fome curious fecrets in his bufinels. A bargain is fruck to the mutual fatisfaction of both parties; and Cbryful changes his fervice for that of the merchant.

CHAP. XIX.

Motive of Cbry/al's new mafter for making fuch a bargain, with the many and great advantages a merchant may make of being in the house. A flort sketch of an election. The curious method which Cbry/al's mafler took to evade the laws againft bribery. He takes offence at the unreasonable prefumption of his conflituents, and refolves to make the most of the bargain he has bought from them, which by a fingular piece of management he proposes to make cheaper than they think. Cbry/al changes his fervice for that of the idol of an iun. The confequences of electioneering. Some account of Chry/ar's new mistrefs. He quits her fervice for a curious purpole. An expedient to prevent the fale of poifon for mind and body. Cbry/al again changes his fervice.

CHAP. XX.

Account of Chryfal's new maîter. His heroic fpirit and refolution to pufh for a penfion or pillory. Meeting between him and a poet. who turns the tables upon him. A curious method of forming a judgment of a work of genius. Chryfal's mafter is beaten out of all his art, and for once buys a book by quality not quantity. The value of an author's name. Chryfal changes his fervice.

117

111

107

CHAP. XXI.

Some account of the company, to which Chryfal's new mafier went. His behaviour to a young female who accofted him in his way home. He takes her to a tavern for an uncommon purpole, where he treats her uncommonly, and goes home with her, from as uncommon a motive. Account of what he faw in her habitation, with the manner in which he behaved there. He takes another lodging

CONTINIE.

- ledging for the whole family, where he leaves them abruptly, to fave himfelf and them trouble.

BOOK the SECOND.

CHAP. I.

Chryfal gives fome account of his mafter. Reafon of his having hean bred to, and mifcarried in a particular profeffion. Interefting remarks on the different kinds of merit neceffary to eminence in different profeffions, confirmed. by firking inflances of their fuccels in each. ... Natural confequence of his being forced into a profefion against his inclination. He is compelled by diffrefs to exert his abilities. Contradictions in his character, and the particular turn of his works accounted for. He Wifts his new family. Affecting flory of an officer. 130

CHAP. II.

Chryfal's mafter carries him to vifit an old acquaintance, who behaves in character on bearing the officer's flory, and furprizes Chryfal's mafter with an account of his having turned Patriot. The general motives for fuch a ftep; with fome remarks on the difference between practice and profefiion, in different inflances. Infignificancy of private characters in attacks upon a miniftry, and why. Reflections on the origin and ufe of fatire, and the abufe of the terms good and ill-nature, with the reafon why fo many cry out against fatire. Chryful changes his fervice in a common way. 139

CHAP. TII.

Chryfal fums up the character of his late mafter. Different opinions for and against the propriety and benefit of fatire. The former supported by good authority. Reafon of fome inconvenience attending the indulgence of fuch a turn. Character of Chryfal's new master concluded from a former fletch. He waits upon his Patron. Character Clastacter of him, with his motivas for fuch a patronage. He gives firiking reatons for objecting to fome parts of, Chryfal's mafter's pamphlet, which the other makes fome weak attempts to vindicate. Chryfal's mafter enjoys the pleafure of tracing his own fame. 146

CHAP. IV.

Chryfal's mafter receives an unwelcome vifit, at an unfeafonable time. He is fent to prifon. Chryfal makes fome unpopular remarks on certain interefting fubjects. Confequences of his mafter's impriforment, with an account of his behaviour in it.

CHAP. V.

Chryfel's mafter is visited in prifon, by his parson; and from what motive. His conduct on being fet at liberty, and the confequence of it. Remarkable grounds on which he was fet at liberty, with a conjecture at the reason of fixing upon them. Chryfal makes an enquiry into certain matters much talked of, and little underflood.

CHAP. VI.

Chryfel's mafter takes a foreign pour. Remarks upon national reflections, and attacks upon private charactars. Chryfel's mafter is called to an account for certain improper liberties, by a very improper perfon whom he treats with uncommon propriety. Chryfal makes form out-of-the-way reflections on a queftion much canvailed to little purpole.

CHAP. VII.

Chryfal's mafter's late conduct draws him into a new • fcrape, in which he comes off but fccoud heft. He takes advantage of his misfortune to make his cleape from a greater. He fuffers the referitment of his enemics, as i far as they can reach him, and meets from his friends the fate of all ulclefs tools, after having ferved them with improbable fuccefs. A firking inflance of the advantage of an upright judge, and equal laws. Chryfal changes his fervice. 165

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VIII.

Reafon of the joy with which Chryfal was received by his new matter. Account of a curious though not nncommon way of getting a living. Convertation between Chryfal's matter and his gueft. They compare notes on their different attempts in the literary trade. Chryfal's matter is encouraged by his friend from his own example. A remarkable account of a certain matter that made much noife. 169

CHAP. IX.

Chryfal's mafter makes fome firiking remarks on his friend's account of this myfterious transaction, and draws inferences from it, not commonly attended to. He entertains his friend with a curious fong, who makes animportant hit, just in his own character, upon it. Chryfal's mafter boggles a little at first at his friend's propofal, but is encouraged by his example to undertake it.

CHAP. X.

Shryfal's mafter purfues his fcheme, and violates moral honefty to ferve the caufe of virtue and religion. He waits upon his patron, who honeftly refules a character to which he knows he has no right; but undertakes the affair from a more prevailing motive, in which he is remarkably affitted by another perfon. of lefs modefty, who pleads the caufe of religion and virtue in vain, till honour at length turns the fcale in their favour. Chryfal's mafter is difappointed of his hopes, and makes ufe of an expedient in character, to efcape from the juft reward of all his labours. Chryfal changes his fervice.

178

174

CHAP. XL

Chryfal again changes his fervice. His new mafter is obliged to pay expedition-fees, to get over artificial delays. He and his miftrefs fet out on a long journey, to do what might have been better done at home. Chryfal makes fome interefting reflections, on a moft important subject. Story of Chryfal's mafter. Chryfal continues his refleclions tions on the fame inbject, which he confiders in a farther, and most affecting point of view. Chryfal changes his fervice.

CONTENTS

CHAP. XH.

Chryfal's new mafter firikes out an adventure. He, is fmitten with a girl in a travelling waggon, and changes his appearance to get admifilion to her. Account of the company in the waggon. A good-natured mifiake of one of the paffengers gives occasion to a broil, which is put an end to by an accident that does not mend the matter. 18a

CHAP. XIII.

Chryfal's maker experiences fome comfortable confequences from the obliging difficient of the waggener. He purfues his defign, by paying common civility to his mifirefs's mother. Convertation, and behaviour of the company. Chryfal's mafter, in the purfuit of his defign, meets an adventure that cools his paffion, and reaffembles the company when they are all like to be at a fault, till one of them luckily hits off the fcent. 194

CHAP. XIV.

The advantage of a ready affirrance. The methodiff accounts curioufly for what he has done; and turning the tables upon Chryfal's matter, charges him with robbery, who is thereupon obliged to difcover himfelf, but is contradicted by one of the company, who boats of a curious acquaintance with him in his own character. He is luckily recognized by a footman, whole matter extricates him from his diffrels, and makes out the millakes that had caufed for much confusion. 199.

CHAP. XV.

Chryfal gives a firiking account of his mafter. He arrives in London, and pays a vifit to his miftrefs. His curious method of courting. His miftrefs makes him a prefent of half her fortune beforehand, in return for which he promiles to marry her next day, and then goes to his girl.

Digitized by Google

gifl. Difference in his behaviour to the two naturally accounted for. An uncommon gueft at a wedding, with as uncommon a manner of celebrating a nuptial-night, flew a full more uncommon infrance of matrimonial complatiance. Chryfal changes his fervice. 205

CHAP. XVI.

Chryfal makes fome reflections, not likely to be much regarded. His mafter pays a love-vifit to a young lady, whole father interposes unpolitely, and makes fome outof-the-way objections. Chryfal's mafter hits upon a feheme for getting over them. He proposes marriage on certain times, which are agreed to, and the day fixed at a little diffance. 211

CHAP. XVIL

Chryfal's mafter is privately married. Not fatisfied with one wife for love, he wants another for money. He propofes the matter to his wife, on whofe refufal he difclofes his grand fcheme; in which, deep as it is laid, he has the mortification to find himfelf anticipated, and his own weapons turned upon himfelf. Confequences of this difcovery. Chryfal's mafter takes a common method of filencing fcandal. Chryfal changes his fervice. 316

CEAP. XVIII.

Chryfal gives an account of certain interesting occurrences. An extraordinary definition of a common word. Great expectations disppointed. The confequence of planning in the clofet the operations of the field, with the origin of that ingacious practice. 413

CHAP. XIX.

Continued. The natural event of fuch a fituation. The general victorious over himfelf, quits the purfuit of military glory for the practice of the virtues of peace. Perfidy of the enemy juftly punihed. The army is formed again under the command of a German, and a fugar plumb given to the Eaglife to flop their mouths at fuch an infult. THE

CHRYSAL:

OR, THE

ADVENTURES

OF A

GUINEA.

BOOKI

CHAP. I.

CHEVERT continues the account of the members. The biftory of a remarkable perfon is given for a remarkable purpofe. His pleafures bring him into diffrefs, from which he extricates himfelf by making them fubfervient to his intereft, and gets into a good REEPING. Not content with the mother, he cafts his eye upon the daughter alfo, but is difappointed, and forced to take up with a frare of her fortune, for procuring her in marriage for another. He refolves to be A GREAT MAN 5 and for that purpofe breaks with his KEEPER, when be has got from her all fhe had to give.

O<sup>NL</sup> of the most fpecious arguments alledged sgainst the obligation to virtue, is the fucces that is often observed to attend the violation of it, in the Vol. IV. B general general purfuits of the world. Of this you fee the itrongeft inflance which this age has ifforded, in that man who fits at the lefe hand of the fuperiof, wrap'd up in the confcioufnels of his own importance, and fimiling contemptuoufly at the company around him, while they believe he is joining in their mirth.

Digitized by GOOgle

A particular account of his life would lead into too great a length. It would feem a fatire on mankind rather than a detail of the actions of one man. However, as a fhort ficetch of it may be of advantage, by unveiling this myftery in the conduct of heaven; and proving the infufficiency of the higheft profperity to confer happinefs, even in the hour of attainment, when that profperity is not founded in, and procured by virtue, I will juft run over the great heads of his flory, with that brevity which the difagreeablenefs of the fubject naturally dictates.

The opening of his life gave no profpect of his prefent exalted flation. Pleafure in every licentious excefs foon diffipated a fmall patrimony; and he was hardly entered into man's effate, when want, of his own earning, began toolare him in the face.

The peculiar caft of a man's mind is in nothing more flrongly shewn, than in the expedients he has recourse to, in order to extricate him from difficulties. Instead of quitting the vices which had brought him into this embarrassiment, he resolved on the first alarm to build his hopes of fortune on them, by pursuing them in a different manner. Experienced in all the mysteries of intrigue, he knew that age and deformity will purchase pleasures, for which youth and beauty expect to be flattered, if not even paid. Unrestrained therefore by any scruples of honour or conficience, he directly determined termined to fix upon fome wealthy female of the former clafs, and never doubted making her paffion repay. him manifold, what he had expended on the gratification of his own.

تح برندي

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

I fee the abhorrence with which the mention of fuch a scheme firikes you. Venal profitution in the female fex. though cut off from every other method of prolonging a wretched existence, is the lowest state to which it can fink. What then can be faid of a man, who, uncompelled by fuch irrefulible neceffity, voluntarily gives up the dignity of his nature, and hiring himfelf to be the flave of lufts, which are a difgrace to it, contentedly cats the bread of infamy and vice? Language yet wants a name for fuch balenels.

This hopeful scheme was no sooner formed, than earried into execution. As his character gained him eafy accels to all fuch as were proper for his purpole, he immediately lingled out an old dowager, in whole difpefal the dotage of a dying hufband had left the accumulated wealth of feveral ages of fuccefsful induftry. Such a quarry engaged all his attention in the purfuit. He paid his addreffes to her, though deftitute of every thing that could raise natural defire, with fo much affiduity and warmth, that the readily receiwed him into her good graces; and in return for the pleasure the found in his conversation, lavished her fortune upon him with a profusion that even exceeded his hopes.

From the principle on which he fet out, it may be judged that he did not neglect to improve fuch an opportunity of repairing his broken fortunes, and laying up a fund for a future day, out of the overflowing of her untimely fondnels. But unbounded as her generofity

B 2

Digitized by Google

GHRYSAL: OR, THE

fity was, he was far from being content, while any thing farther remained poffibly to be got from her. Belide the great wealth which was directly in her power, a very large effate was by family-fettlements to defcend to an only daughter, whom fhe had by her hufband. As foon therefore as her modelt lover had got poffeffion of the former, his heart yearned for the latter alfo, with as much greedinefs, as if his wants were only increafed by his acquifitions.

But though he was feldom long at a loss for means to accomplifh any thing he had in view, as he was under no refurint from principle in the choice of them, there was an obflacle in his way here, which all the fertility of his genius could not furmount. This was his connection with the mother, the nature of which he well knew would never let her confent to a fcheme defiractive of itfelf; for he had no fear of her making opposition from motives of honour or virtue to any thing that did not clafh with that, as he found none in his own conficience even to this, though contrary to the first principles of nature.

Since he could not therefore get the daughter's whole fortune, by marrying her, he refolved to exert his influence on her mother to give her to fome perion of his chuling, who fhould divide it with him, as a recompence for making the match. For this purpole, he pitched upon a near relation of his own, who readily gave into the fcheme, though poffelt himfelf of a fortune that placed him above the neceffity of flooping to fuch meannels. The confent of the guardian mother, as he forefaw, was eafily obtained. Sne was happy in having fuch an opportunity of proving her regard for him, as well as of removing her daughter out of his reach.

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

17

reach, his attention to whom, while his first project was in his head, had not escaped her jealous notice.

His thare of the prize, added to his other gains, made him now a man of confiderable fortune, and fired him with an ambition of making a figure in the flate To accomplish this, the natural turn of his mind fuggented it to him to marry into fome family, the interest and fplendor of which might drown the obscurity of his own original, and affift his hopes. Nor did he apprehend any opposition to this scheme, from the fame quarter that had defeated the former. He had now gotten from her all that the had to give ; and the fame principle which prompted him to be the hired drudge of her loofe defires, made him find no feruple to leave her fervice, when the was no longer able to pay the wages of it.

Nothing is eafler than to make matter for difpute. On her expressing her refentment, with the haughtinefs which the thought the circumflances of the con nection between them gave her a right to affume, as the had on many oscalions before, at fomething he had done with delign to provoke her, his fentibility tools fire, and in just indignation at treatment fo improper for a man of honour to fubmit to, he bound himfelf by the most dreadful imprecations to shake off fo intolerable a yoke for ever, and fo flung out of her pre-Gencé.

Her furprize at a behaviour, fo different from what he had ever thewn before, fulpended her relentment, and the waited with impatience for a repetition of the blandifhments with which he had been accuftomed to shoth her anger. But what was her altonishment to find, that inftead of making any advances of the kind, he

Ba

CHRY.SAL: OR, THE

The had actually withdrawn himfelf from her houles. This alarmed her. In the arrogance of her former fuperiority, the lofs of which the was not yet fentible of, the fent him a peremptory fummons to attend her directly. But her commands had now loft their weight, and the received a refufal, the more cutting for being couched in cool, equivocal politenefs. This drew on him an epiftolary torrent of upbraidings, expolulations, and at laft of the most tender intreaties; but all were equally ineffectual. He pleaded his rath vow, lamented the cruel obligation of it; and as the began to be fostened by this addrefs, hinted at a fenfe of religion, and even diffantly recommended it to her, as the best confolation under the croffes and afflictions of life.

Such fentiments from him could mean nothing but fneering infult. In that light the took them. However as the nature of the affair made it improper for her to open her mind too explicitly, the refolved to play his own game back upon him, and affect to be convinced by arguments, of which the hoped to take advantage, at a proper time, though in a manner very different from his intention in applying them.

aby Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

CHAR IL.

Continued. He begins bis scheme successfully by scaling a marriage. His late KEEPER makes an artful demand of all the presents she bad given bim, which he answers as artfully. He advances in his scheme, by steps exactly in his character, and gets into favour with a great person. CHRYSAL makes some remarks on the origin of the affections of the human mind, and the different manner of breeding men and boxses, with the consequence.

WHILE the was pleating herfelf with this thought, he had earried the most difficult part of his scheme into execution. The paffion for play, which marks the character of the prefent age, though it really counteracts every focial virtue, is yet the means of affociating all kinds and ranks of people, who have, or even appear to have money to play for. At meetings for this purpose, he had found means to make an acquaintance with a nobleman, who was fo pleafed with his converfation, fludied defignedly to pleafe him, that he admit. ted him to an intimacy in his family, which he knew fo well how to improve with one of his daughters, that. in defpite of the difparity of age and rank, he foon prevailed upon her to crown his hopes by a private marriage, as the confent of her family could not be expected.

As the immediate fortune of the lady could not be thought an object of marcenary purfuit, when the first emotions of refertment gave place to reflection, his size of paffion was admitted as an excuse for this violation tation of the facred laws of hospitality; and his wife's father unknowingly completed his delign, by exerting all his interest, which was very great, to advance him, in the state.

· · · · · ·

Digitized by GOOgle

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

The fecrecy, with which it had been necellary, for him to conduct this affair, and the rapidity of this fuccels, prevented his late miltrels from making any attempt to defeat it. As foon however as fhe recovered from the first stroke of her assonishment at the news of his marriage, the proceeded to put her fcheme in execution. Accordingly the fent him compliments of congratulation on this happy fruit of his conversion, exhorting him to perfevere in it : and profeffed her refo-Bution to imitate his example ; and dedicate the remainder of her days to the duties of virtue and religion : as a proof of which the proposed to begin by reftoring to her injured daughter, as much as poffible of the fortune which the confidence of her hufband had left in her power, and the had unhappily lavithed in purfuits. to the criminal nature of which he had opened her eves. As all that was not diffipated beyond recovery was what the had given to him, and her reftoring it there. fore mult depend on his making a reflitution to her first. he was not a moment at a lofs for the drift of this example. traordinary inflance of penitence, nor how to treat the account of it. He immediately returned her an an. fwer, congratulating her in his turn, with fincerity equal to her own, on her pious refolutions, the intention of which, he faid, would make amends for the impoffibility of carrying them into execution, any farther than by flinting herfelf to the indifpenfible neoeffaries of life, and laying up the reft of her large income. to supply the place of the fums flie had expended.

Sueh

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 21

Such an answer neceffarily drew on an explanation, and of courfe a demand of the feveral prefents the had made him in the courfe of their dalliance, and knew he had laid up, as he lived at her expence all the time. This was no more than he expected. He replied therefore, without being in the least difconcerted, that he looked upon every thing he had received from her not as prefents, but payment for the time he had devoted to attending upon her; and for that reafon thought it inconfutent with that regard for juffice, which is infeparable from true piety, for her to demand fuch a reflitution, efpecially as the must be fentible that he could not now make it, without doing wrong to his wife, who had an undoubted property in every thing that his correfpondence, which might be mifunderflood, and fo diffurb his connubial happinefs, might be dropped betwern them.

This fufficiently explained the motives of his conduct; and the defpicable fituation which fhe had brought herfelf to. However the was obliged to acquiefce with the beft grace fhe could, without even the poor fatisfaction of revenge; for he had taken care to infert in every paragraph of his letters fuch anecdotes of the connection that had been between them, that it was impoffible for her to fhew them in order to expofe him, without expofing herfelf at the fame time to the contempt and detellation of the world. From this time therefore all intercourfe, beyond that of common civility, was broken off between them; though fome confequences of their former connection, which happened even after her death, make one of the molt firiking parts of his flory, as fhall be obferved in the proper place.

The

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

The first effays of a man's disposition indicate the rule by which his whole life will be conducted. The intereft of the family into which he had thus ftolen, had no fooner raifed him to fome degree of power, than he afpired to the higheft ; to attain which he refolved to purfue a method exactly in his character. This was to ingratiate himfelf, he regarded not by what means, with one of the first perfonages in the state, whole interest he meant to make use of. as long as it could ferve him, and then fly in his face to fhew his independence. Nature had never endowed a man with qualifications fitter for fuch a purpole. He was every thing, to every man-The gay were flruck with his wit; the grave with his folidity ; while an appearance of candour and fincerity, that lulled fufpicion to fleep, won the confidence of all with whom he conversed; all which powers of pleasure were by a fervility of difposition derived perhaps from a fervile birth, profituted to the humour of those whom he defired to pleafe, however contrary to his own.

I fee your curiolity at my faying, that the fervility of his disposition might perhaps be derived from a fervile birth. You want to have the origin of the affections of the human foul explained, whether they are imprinted on it, as its first emanation, from the fource of all existence, or received by traduction from the immediate parents of the body, or only caused by the casual operation of external objects. But this, as I have faid in other cases, is a difficulty that I am not at liberty to folve, as the question is not yet determined by the learned; though much ingenious reasoning has been displayed on every fide of it. This only I shall fay, that the practice of mankind feer to contradict the fecond of these opinions, who shew no regard to the dispositions tions of these on whom they propagate their own species, though they trace back the pedigree of a dog, or an horse, for many generations, for fear of any fault in the breed; the reason, you may perhaps imagine, why the brutes bred with such care are found so much feldomer to degenerate, than the offspring of the greatest men.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. III.

Continued. He practifes a fucce/sful metbod for gaining the confidence of his new patron, which he turns to good account. Hiftory of the lower who fucceded him in the good graces of his late KEEP. EB. He firives to prevent his taking advantage of his influence over her; and finding be fails in that, foels him into diffrefs, which brings his life in bis power. He flights many motives, which might have had weight with others, and takes advantage of the opportunity to get rid of him, and all farther trouble about him. He continues to dupe him, till the laft moment when his eyes are opened, and all comes out.

AS foon as he had infinuated himfelf into the pleafurable liking of his defigned patron, by an unwearied exertion of all his powers of pleafing, he directly proceeded with the niceft art to improve that liking into an important confidence. He watched his every action, word, and took, till he difcovered the peculiar turn of his mind, to which he accommodated his own fo implicitly, that the very faculties of his foul feemed to move only by the other's will.

They

They who are above deceit themselves, furfacet it not in others. That felf-love, which is infeparable from humanity, was eafy imposed upon by fuch art. His patron liked himself in him; and infenfibly came to think all referve unneceffary with one, whole foul appeared to be only the fhadow of his own. This foon gave him real confequence, as the numbers, whom interest or inclination attach'd to his patron, found it neceffary to take the lead from him; and enabled him to grafp at every opportunity of engroffing power, and acquiring wealth, to fupply those pleasures which he had quitted only from neceffity, and returned to again the moment he had the means of obtaining them.

But all this torrent of fuccefs was not able to divert his attention for a moment from the finallelt matter in which his avarice was concerned; as he gave the firongeft proof in the following affair, to explain which I must look back to the woman, whole lavish fondness first raifed his fortune, as it happened in confequence of his connection with her, though fome confiderable time after her death.

It is observed that habitual indulgence continues the paffions proper to youth, after the fire that first supplied them is exhausted, and the end for which they were implanted by nature become impossible.

Old as this woman was, when our hero deferted her, and to appearance as incapable of feeling as raifing defire, fhe had fo long accuftomed herfelf to the gratification of every fenfual appetite, that fhe could not bear to live without a lover. The difficulty was, how to fix upon a proper object: for as intereft was her only attraction, the first advances must necefiarily come from her; and then her prodigality to her last had put it out of her power to make it worth the while of fuch another as fhe might like to fupply his place. Precluded thus from much delicacy in her choice, neceffity directed her to one of her own domeltics, fomething in whole circumflances pointed him out more particularly to her notice.

There is not a more defpicable inftance of vanity, than being ashamed of the connections of nature, becaule of poverty, when that poverty is not the effect of vice. A far diftant female relation had from this vanity bequeathed to her a very confiderable fortune, to which this man should have been heir, had not the lownels of his condition, a motive fufficient to have influenced a generous heart in his favour, made her think it, would be a difgrace to her to be fucceeded by him; for which reafon the wantonly deprived him of the inheritance of his ancefors, to give it to one who did not. want it. Dispirited by fuch unnatural injustice, for which the Law afforded no redrefs, he was no longer able to purfue the industry that had hitherto been his fupport : and funk into fuch diffress, that his defpair made him at length throw himfelf at the feet of her who enjoyed his fpoils, to beg relief.

This happened critically at the time when her inclinations for a new lover began to get the better of her grief for the lofs of the laft. Softened by what fhe had herfelf fo lately felt, fhe pitied his diffrefs; and as all the tenderer paffions are allied, that pity was foon warmed into fuch love, as fhe was capable of feeling. Accordingly, as fhe had taken him into her family, on his first application, fhe now entrusted him with the management of her affairs, to give colour for the further intimacy fhe had in view. The confequence was natural. He readily took hints, too plain to be overlooked; and fhe kept up his affiduity in her fervice, by fome prefents in hand, and grants of more, charged most of them indeed on the inheritance of his ancestors, which she had fettled upon his predecessfor in her favour after her death, till when they were not to take place or be discovered, to avoid his reproaches, as well as those of her daughter and her husband for such a repetition of her former follies; and because the did not chuse to straiten her own circumstances, by the immediate payment of them. But these wages of vice, however welcome in his present indigence, proved fatal to him in the end.

Vol. 1V.

natur

The hero of my tale, who faw the rife of this new favourite, and knew from experience on what it muft be founded, though the affected to attribute her notice of him to gratitude to his relation, and retributory justice to himfelf, gave him a genteel and profitable employment under one of the many which he himfelf enjoyed in the flate, profeffedly in compliment to her, but really to attach him to his own intereft, and prevent his exerting his influence on her to obtain fuch grants as before-mentioned; for the turn of his own mind made him fulfpect every thing that was poffible; and fuch is the partiality of man to himfelf, that he who has been ungrateful to all mankind, will yet expect gratitude from others.

Proud of this preferment, which railed his rank in life, and depending on the professions of friendship and promises which his new friend liberally made him, he thought proper at her death not only not to claim her grants for the prefent, to avoid breaking with him as he knew must be the confequence, but allo to give up ta.

Digitized by GOOgle

to him a particular gift, part of his own alienated inheritance, which he had received publicly from her, as a reward for his fervices, and truft to his honour for an equivalent return. But that return, when at length it was made, was as far from being equivalent, as his promifes were from performances; nothing being more contrary to his intentions, than to enable him to fupport his claims to those grants, of which he had gotten notice, and judged from his own heart the reafon of their being concealed. He continued therefore to feed him with promifes, which led his vanity into expense, and encouraged him to embark in schemes that he had not a fund to execute, till he fell into difreffes, to extricate himfelf from which he had recourfe to means, that laid his life at the mercy of this his funnoiled friend.

There are fome crimes, the confequences of which are fo dangerous, that no puniforment can be too fevere to deter from them. One of the worlt of these is imitating a man's fignature with a defign to deceive. It perpe-, tuates the violation of truth, undermines the fecurity of innocence, and breaks that confidence which is indifpenfibly needfary to carry on the concerns of life. But though no circumstances can, in a legal fenfe, extenuate the heinousnels of this crime, there were some in this particular inftance, which would have deterredany other man from the profecution of it ; it had been committed not with an intention of doing injustice to him, or any other, but to remedy for a time his injuflice by raifing apparently the value of the return he had made for the gift of their common benefactrels, as I have before observed, nearer to an equality with it, C 2 in in order to procure prefent relief from diffrefs, of which we had been, in fo many femfes, the caufe.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

But all these confiderations were of no weight with him, when put in competition with the conveniency of getting rid of one whom he doubly hated, for being privy to his iniquities, and interfering with his interest. He helitated not a moment therefore to make use of an opportunity, offer'd beyond his hopes, and facrifice him, under the specious appearance of paying obedience to the laws.

- In this it was necessary for him to act with the deepeft diffimulation, to accomplifh his defign in its full extent. But this was no difficulty to him. He profeffed pity for his misfortunes; and while he corrupted all, in whom the wartch placed confidence, to betray him, managed fo as to feem to be compelled by law to appear against him, though he might with the greatest ease have avoided it, and buried the whole in filence. Nor did he stop here ! his malice seemed to purfue him even beyond the grave ; for inflead of permitting him to prepare in peace for the approach of fate, he buoyed him up with hopes of a pardon, to earn which the deluded victim fubscribed to every thing dictated to him to blacken his own character, and make void the grants, which he had purchased at fo dear a rate; and in this infatuation he was kept to the last moment, to prevent his recanting; for which purpose, his nearest friends, and all who might have undeceived him, and administered comfort to his diftrefs in the hour of anguish, were barred admittance to him.

But his eyes were opened on the verge of life, and in that awful moment when truth only is fpoken, he revoked revoked every thing he had been thus drawn in to fay, and afferted the validity of the claims, which were the caufe of his ruin; fo that the whole fehrme, laboured with fuch deep damination to deceive the world, was defeated.

Digitized by Google

I fee the horror with which you are affected at fuch a feene; and fhall therefore close it with observing, that though he was permitted to perpetrate his crimes, divine justice prevented his reaping the fruits he propofed from them; as, befide the immediate price of his blood, it cost him more, than he earned by this complicated guilt, to ftop the cries of the widow and orphan, and bribe venal defamation to filence, when it was too late, and the mystery of his wickedness was made known to the world.

CHAP. IV.

Continued. A view of bis political character introduces a maxim not jufficiently attended to. He fails in a great firoke, and makes so many wrong ones, that be is kicked out of power, and forced to be content with profit, which be pursues through thick and thin. An unbappy event gives him an opportunity of sewing his ingratitude to his late Patron, on the merit of which be rises to higher power than ever, which be wisely exerts behind the curtain, and leaves HIS TOOLS to hear the blame. An account of the juff fruits of so much success concludes his flory.

YOU have hitherto feen him only in private life, 171 now give you a glimple of his political character, C 3 which which will convince you of a truth, for obvious realons not fufficiently attended to, which is, that the ruling principles of the heart influence the actions in all capacities; and therefore, that it is impossible for a had man to be a good minister.

The power to which the confidence of his patron railed him, was fuch as might have enabled him to effect either much good or evil, had he known how to have ufed it to the belt advantage. But his eagernefs in the purfuit of his own views put him off his ufual guard, and diffeovered his principles before it was too late to oppofe them.

The molt exalted minds are not exempted from human weakneffes. That of his patron was a thirk of power, though without a thought of using it in any improper manner. Some late fervices, of the higheit importance, which he had performed to the flate, fuggefled to our hero a scheme for rivetting his interest with him fill ftronger, by procuring him a power which he knew would center really in himself. Accordingly he exerted all his abilities and influence to wrest from the Sovereign an effential part of the incommunicable power of the crown, and vest it in him.

Such an attempt inflantly gave the alarm to every real friend, not only of the government, but alfo of him in whole favour it was profeffed to be made; who though they karboured no fear of him, did not dare to offer fuch an affront to their Sovereign, and give a wound to the political conflictution of their country, which might be of molt dangerous confequence in lefs fafe hands. The defign therefore was defeated; and inflead of ferving his patron, only inflilled doubts of line.

him isto those who were not acquainted with the uprightness of his heart.

Though the interest of his patron continued to fupport him for a confiderable time after this, his whole conduct was fuch a feries of blunders, (many of them fo grofs, that it was doing violence to probability to impute them to ignorance) that at length the voice of the people was raifed against him, and he was obliged to give up all pretentions to power, and fit down with an employment of great, but mere profit, which all his own folicitations, though urged with the abject importunity of a common beggar, even to fhedding tears, and imploring compafiion for his wife and family; all he had hitherto acquired having been fquandered as faft as it came, on his pleafures, would not have procured for him, had not his patron languinely elpoused his intereft. even to the injury of his own, though on a difcovery of his principles and private character, new too notorious to be concealed, he rejected him from his effeem. and refuled to give any farther countenance to his amhition.

From this time he applied every power of his foul to amafs wealth, which he had too many opportunities of doing in his prefent employment, the most iniquitous of which he never failed to improve to still greater iniquity, regardless of public reproach, and the distress of myriads, fuffering under his injustice, whose cries and imprecations ascended hourly to heaven against him.

Riches give confequence, effectally with those who factifice every thing to luxary. Though he had no public power, his perfonal influence over individuals in a flort time became greater than ever, as he too foon had an opportunity of proving.

Digitized by Google

One of those events, which fnew the vanity of all human defigns, however wifely conducted and glorious in their end, threw the government into other hands. New men always adopt new measures, if only from an affectation of appearing wifer than their predecelfors. In this change his late patron loft all influence, except that which virtue establishes in the hearts of the vir-This was an opportunity for fhaking off the tuous. weight of obligation not to be milled by one of our Hero's turn. He not only deferted him directly in the bafeft manner, but alfo, to ingratiate himfelf with the prefent powers, fathered upon him the fictions of his own brain, under the appearance of betraying his fecrets, and made a merit of aggravating his ingratitude and perfidy by open infults, in hope of provoking him to fome unguarded act or expression of refentment, which might give advantage against him, by the common trick of applying to the mafter what is meant to the fervant. But for once, all his art failed. Confident in conficious innocence and merit, he difdained to give weight to fuch bafe machinations by taking notice of them; and receiving this ingratitude as a punifhment for having placed his effeem to unworthily, looked down upon him with indignant contempt, nor was ever heard to honour his name with utterance.

Such a proof of his fincerity gained our hero the confidence of his new friends, to whole tottering power his perfonal intereft was found a neceffary fupport. But he lent not that fuppert but on his own terms. Cooled by experience, he had learned that the name of power is always purfued by envy and ambition. He therefore wifely gratified the vanity of primers with the dangerous fhadow, while he releved the fubflance fance to himfelf, dictating in fafety, because in fecret, all the measures for any mistake in which they were answerable.

ale

33

In this fituation you fee him now. But fuch a feries of fuccefs has been far from procuring him the happinefs propofed in the purfuit. Recollection of the means imbitters the end. The ingratitude and perfidy of one, whom he had placed his whole confidence in, and bound to him by the higheft obligations, upbraid him continually with his own bafenels to his patron, and make him afraid to place truft in any other; fo that he lives in a flate of conflant fufpicion and dread of all mankind, defitute of that friendly confidence, which is the cement of fociety, the comfort and fupport of life.

Nor is this the only wound that rankles in his breaft! the unhappy victim of his avarice, murdered under the formalities of law, is never abfent from his thoughts a moment. Conjured up by conficience, his fpectre baunts his dreams. He fees him in the dark. He hears him in the deepeft filence. Nor can the loud laugh of mirth and riot drown his louder voice in the midft of company. Hence that gloom which you fee hang upon his brow; that conficious of guilt, which gives a caft of horror to his very finiles.

Confider now the flory of this man ; and own with reverence and awe that vice never wants an avenger : that wickednefs is its own panifhment. Who would not rather be the apparent wretch, that wanders homelefs through the world, fed by the cold hand of common charity, than he, with all his honours, power and wealth ?

The characters of the reft, except him who had been my mafter's competitor for admiffion into the fuperior order of the fociety, are not diffinguilhed by any thing to make them worth difplaying; I shall therefore leave them in the obscurity they deferve; as I shall referve his for another place, where some new occurrences will show it in a stronger light.

24

CHAP. V.

CHRYSAL leaves the convent. His mafter proceeds in ebaracter. He practifes a new manner of courtfrip; and fignalizes his talent for intrigue, by debauching the daughter of his friend. Her diffrefs, when too late, gives him fome flight qualms of confcience; but be foon recovers, and goes on in his enterprize.

IT was my fortune to leave this place, in the poficifion of the fame perfon who had brought me to it. The moment the meeting broke up, he flew to reduce into practice fome part of the theory, which had been fo well difcuffed among them. A perfon of diffinguifhed learning and virtue, who had taken great pains though to little purpole, with fome part of the education of his youth, had observed of late, that he feemed to pay him particular refpect, and was more frequent than ufual in his vifits at his houfe, where he behaved with a moral decency, very different from his general character.

The good man faw this with real pleafure, and attributing it to the influence of his own conversation, as vanity will find its way into the beft hearts, gave him all the encouragement he could to come, in hope of working a thorough reformation in him. But he was dereived derived in that hope; and found, when too late, that he had cherished a viper in his bosom, to fling his heart.

35

Eufebius (that was this perfon's name) had an only daughter, on whofe education he had exerted the tendereft care. She was now in that dangerous time of life, when ripened youth has given all the paffions their full force, and reafon not yet acquired fitrength to rale them. This danger though feemed lefs threatening to her than it is to moft of the fex; nature, which had been moft liberal to her mind, having denied thofe charms of face which too often prove a fnare to the poffefor; and the precepts of her father trained her in fuch priaciples of wildom and virtue, as feemed a fufficient guard.

Such circumflances, exclusive of the obligations of honour not to infringe the laws of holpitality, (I add not virtue, for that has long loft all obligation in matters of this kind) would have prevented any other man from thinking of attempting her; but the pleafure of feducing innocence fupplied every defect of beauty; and the difficulty of fuch a conqueft doubled his ardour in the purfuit; as the triumph would eftablift the fame of his gallantry, which had never yet alpired beyond a fervant wench; befide that the age and profefion of her father fecured him from the danger of perfonal refentment. Encouraged by all thefe equally powerful motives, the moment he faw her, he marked her out for the proof of his talents for intrigue, how to begin his attack though, fo as to clude her father's vigilance, without alarming her virtue, was the queftion.

But he was not long at a loss. Difficulties, which | appear unfurmountable to wildom, are easily conquered by cunning, (and with this he was plentifully flored) because because it will make use of means, which the other holds in abhorrence. In purfuance therefore of a plan, which he foon formed, he cultivated the acquaintance of Enfebrus with the greatest affiduity ; and in all his vifits to his house, turned his conversation entirely upon points of fpeculative knowledge, in which he profelled the most earnest defire of information. Eulebius took the bait. As these were the usual topics of discourse between him and his daughter, he was pleafed at her being prefent, whenever my malter was with him, both for her information, and to give her an opportunity of difplaying the advantages fhe had received from his care; for which purpole he often led her and my mafter into arguments, to which he liftened with the higheft delight, as the always had the better in them. Nor was the lefs pleafed on fuch occations, than her father. The modelt deference, which my mafter constantly paid to her judgment, was fo flattering to her confciouffiels of fuperiority, that the foon became fond of his company; at the fame time, that the artfulnels of his addrefs to her, for he never fhewed any other notice of her fex, than by a most guarded delicacy in his expressions, deceived the watchful care of Eusebius to effectually, that he never forupled to leave his two pupils (as he fondly affected to call them) alone together, when any buliness demanded his attendance elfewhere.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

36

As this was what my master had all along aimed at, it may be supposed he did not neglect to improve opportunities fo favourable to his wifhes. He always turned his conversation directly to such subjects, as were most likely to inflame the paffions, on the gratification of which he expatiated with a particular warmth T and and loxuriancy of imagination, but in terms fo well wrapped up, as to conseal the poifon they conveyed. The effect foon anfwered his delign. Subjects, pronefed merely as points of speculation, gave her no alarm. And when fuch thoughts are once fuggefted, nature will lead them to her own onds. Her paffions had been fmothered, not extinguished; and were the readier to take fire for fuch reftraint. She heard him therefore. with pleafure, and flid infentibly into danger, the direct mention of which would have flruck her with horror.

Matters were in this critical fituation, when he returned from the fociety. The moment he alighted, he few to the house of Eusebius, who unhappily was not at home. The conversation foon fell into its late course. There are some moments, in which nature will bear down all opposition. Though the had indulged herfelf in talking on fuch fubjects, the meant nothing more. But he was too well verfed in the practice to let her flop at the theory; and one unguarded minute murdered the peace of her future life, and blafted the fruits of all her father's care.

It is impossible to describe what the felt, when passion save place to reafon, and the became fentible of what had paffed. Even he, hacknied as he was in the ways of wickedness, could not fland it. He left her precipitately, and for the first time felt fomething like remorie. But these qualms lasted not long. His defires were rather raifed than fatisfied ; belide that to have flopped here, without making his fuccels public, would have disappointed perhaps the principal pleasure he had in view. He refolved therefore to feduce her from her father's Vol. IV. P ..

. .:

CHRYSAL: OR; THE

38 father's house, that all the world might be witnesses of his triumph.

For this purpole he went to her the next morning, at a time when he knew Eufebius was ufually engaged abroad. On enquiring for her, he was answered that fine was not well; and was turning about to go away, when her maid, who from her own experience had fufpetted fomething of the caufe of her miltrefs's illnefs, officiously ran to him, and told him fhe was in her drefs. img-room.

CHAP. VI.

Continued. CHRYSAL'S mafter makes bis triumph pablic, by feducing bis new miltrefs away from bes father's boufe. The manner in which be imposed upon them both to effect this; with the coujoketion be gave her for fome natural confequences of his gallanery. His triumph is tompleted by her going upon the town, and her father's breaking bis beart.

HIS intimacy in the family giving him a title to visit her there, he went directly up, where he found her in a condition that once more shook his reference, and made him almost forry for what he had done. She fat the image of despair! sheep had never closed her eyes! she had not changed the difordered dress of the day before; and her face was to swollen with incessant weeping, that he could hardly believe it was the.

Her maid withdrawing conveniently, as foon as he entered, he threw himfelf at her feet in all the trick of woe, and imploring her pardon, lamented what had paffed (for which he imprecated heaven's vengeance on his

itized by GOOQI

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 39 , his own head) in fuch pathonate tooffns, as amid all her grief, alarmed her fear of his being overheard, for hitherto the fecret was their own.

The first hint of this cured him of his penitence, and fuggested to him how to proceed. He perissed in all the extravagance of grief; and acted his part to well, that forgetting her own distress for a moment, the was infentibly led to administer confolation to him. This was what he wanted! he at length feemed to be comforted by her arguments, which he gradually improved to far as to glance at a continuance of the guilty commerce, which he prefied for by the most rapturous proissions of love, and the strongest vows of unalterable constancy and truth.

This was an attack, which the was no way prepared far! her heart was foftened by grief; and thame for what was path precluded her arguments againft a repetition. She belitated however, filenced not convineed, till the voice of her father turned the fcale. 'Ol fave me from his fight!' (exclaimed the, wringing her bands) 'fave me from his tight! I go to death, to any thing rather than meet his eye.<sup>2</sup>---

"Nor thall you meet it," (anfwered my mafter, clafping her in his arms, and killing away the tears that trickled down her cheeks,) ' I'll go this inflant; and take him home with me as upon bufinefs, where I'll find means to detain him, while you pack up fome immediate neceffaries, and prepare to meet my faithful valet de chambre, who thall wait with a coach at the end of next fireet, and conduct you to my country houfe, whither I'll follow you on the wings of love, and drown every difagreeable thought in rapture."

He did not give her time to answer, but rushed di-D 2 rectly rectly out of the foom, and meeting her ready maid at the door, took his one from her, who told him the had excuted her mittrefs's abfence from supper the night before, on a pretence of her being engaged in reading, as the faid in the morning, that the had fat up to hate the could not rife to breakfaft.

Satisfied with these excuses, because he suspected nothing elfe, Eusebius, on hearing my master was above, was coming up to pay his compliments to him, when he met him at the bottom of the flairs. 'I must give up arguing with one,' (faid my master finiling, as he went forward into the parlour, whither he knew Eusebius would neceffarily attend him) ' who fits up fludying all night. She has turned me out on a pretence of dreffing; but ' know it is to go back to the book at which I caught ber; fo that I shall make but a poor figure in the evening if you don't help me out. However, 1'll try! I am not assumed to yield to her! but come! I called fo early to beg your company at my house, where I have fomething that will please you to eonfult you upon. I shant keep you long, as I am obliged to go out before dinner.'

To this Eusebius readily affented; and my mafter putting his hand under his arm, led him away, proud of fuch familiarity with a perfor of his rank, as unfufpecting as a victim to the altar. As foon as he got home, he gave the neceffary influctions to his truffy valet de chambre, and then returning to Eusebius; amufed him with imaginary fehemes of reformation and ecconomy in his family, and improvements in his house till the return of his emillary let him know all was over-He then difmiffed Eusebius with a fmile of triumph, who went home, happy in his mind at the prudence and and virtue of his convertation, the effects as he fondly imagined of his own care and example ; the last time his mind ever knew happinels.

-41

The moment he was gone, my maîter hafted after the deluded fugitive, whom he overtook juft as the alighted at his house, the fervants of which were too well accultomed to fuch things, to be furprized at the fight of a new face. The manner of their meeting may be mfilly conceived. On his fide all was joy and triumple; on her's guilty confusion, fhame and fear. However, • repetition, though the higheft aggravation of a crime, is yet lefs terrifying than the first commission; beside the had now gone too far to flop at any thing.

Three days he flaid with her, every moment of which was imbittered to her by reflection, and facened tedious to him from fatiety and impatience to make his triumph known; and then left her on a pretence of bufinefs, with yows of immediate return; and going back to London, repaired directly to the tavern, where he had by letter appointed to meet all his affociates, to whom he related the whole affair in fuch terms of exultation as raifed their envy, not fo much at his poffedion of her, as the glory of fuch a triumph.

I fee yous anxiety to know the fate of the unhappy Fulfebius, and his more unhappy daughter. Though I faw them no more myfelf, I had too many opportunitics of hearing their flory, the fum of which is this. Enfebius, on his return home from my mafter, found a note from his daugher, bidding him facewel for ever, and defiring hie would not take the trouble of making any enquiry after her, as the was unworthy of his care. The diffraction evident in the fight and purport of this note; too plainly thewed her ruine This was an attack

D 3

Digitized by Google

GHRYSAL: OR, THE

'42

tack his heart was not proof againft. He fank down inflantly in a fwoon, in which he elcaped fome hours of milery before he recovered his fenfes.

The first exertion of his reason was to make enquite after his daughter, but no one could give him any information, her maid who conducted having accompanied her flight. He then flew to his friend, my mafter, for counsel and affistance ; for the goodness of his own heart would neither let him fufpect him, nor defert her in the ruin into which the had fallen ; but he was told at his house, that a certain nobleman of his acquaintance had called upon him the moment he left him, and taken him into the country for a few days. Every cnquiry he could make after his daughter was equally unfuccefsful, till my malter's exultation made the whole affair public. This, if poffible, gave fresh poignancy to his grief. He did not however defert the wretched victim of fuch villainy, but wrote to her directly to return to him, and hide her fhame from the world in his potom ; but despair made her reject his offer.

As for her, a few days, in which my malter left her to the comfort of her own reflections, difcovered to her that his love had been injurious to her health, as well as to her peace of mind. What the felt at this difcovery may eafily be conceived. She wrote to him in the agony of her foul, to repreach fuch manifold balenefs; but inflead of an aufwer of excuse or confolation, received only a quack doctor's advertifement, and a bank note for a trifling fum, included in a blank cover. The fame poft brought her her father's offer of forginenefs and reception. The contraft was more than fhe could bear. She hutried back to town, where defpair prompting her to revenge her folly on herfielf by fiill deeper deeper ruin, the plunged into all the horrors of a life of common proflication.

ed by Google

This filled the measure of her father's woe. He had no redrefs to expect in this world; and therefore refigning the punifhment of his wrongs to the great Avenger, indulged his grief in filence, till in a few months is brought his grey hairs to the grave,

CHAP. VII.

÷٤

"CHRYSAL'S mafter pays bis court to a great perform who feems not much to relife bis bumour, and expresses some unfastionable sentiments concerning polite pleasures. In the course of a regular progreffion, CHRYSAL comes into the poffestion of a Beau.' Hiftory of a Beau, with a journal of bis manner of life for one day. CHRYSAL changes bis fervice, in a common way, for that of a Lady or FASHION.

THE next morning after my mafter's return to London, he went to pay his court to the Heir of the Grown, who was then at one of his country feats. Some public occasion had brought a concourse more than ufgal, in those retirements, to pay their duty to the Prince that morning. As my maîter was one of the last who came, as foon as his devoirs were ended, fome of the company accidentally afked him what had kept him to late; on which, with an easy air of pleafantry he answered aloud, that he had been detained by a very whimfical affair :' 'A certain nobleman' (faid he) went into company last night, fo immensely drunk, that having fat down to play, and loft five thousand pound. he quite forgot it this morning, and refuted to pay the - money,

CHRYSAL; OR, THE

money, till fome perfon of honour, who was unconcerned in the matter, fhould vouch his having loft it fairly, on which it was referred to me, and forry I am that I was qualified to give it against him.<sup>9</sup>

'How, my Lord! by being a perfon of honour!! (fays the gentleman fpoke to.)--

'No! (replied my master, with a fignificant finile) not fo neither ! but by being unconcerned in winning it.'-----And then turning short to another, 'But have you heard the news, my Lord?' (faid he) 'Mr ----caught his wife yesterday, taking a ferious walk in Kensington gardens, with the gentleman whom we all know he forbad her keeping company with, fome time.

<sup>6</sup> A finile of general approbation encouraged him for much, that he concluded with faying, he wilhed he had himfelf been the happy delinquent for taken, as he doubted not but the gravell bifhop on the bench would, were he to fpeak his mind honeftly.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>6</sup> The Prince had head him without interruption ; but as foon as he had ended, turning to a nobleman, who flood near him. There can be no greater infult? (faid he, with a determined look, and folemn accent) <sup>6</sup> to a perfon who is appointed to put the laws of a country in execution, than for any one to boaft of a breach of those laws in his prefence. For my part, if I am ever called by Providence to that flation, it is my invariable refolution, that no man, how exalted focuere in rank, who lives in open violation of any law, has manor divine, fhall ever hold employment under me, or receive countenance from me.

• This reduke damped my mafter's fpirits, as it fruck a reverential awe into all prefent. He bung down his head; head; and in a few minutes withdrew quite abafh'd. But he foon recovered; and to filence the jefts of his companions, and fhew that he was not to be browbeaten out of his own way, he made one with them to fpend the evening at a brothel tavern, where he gave me to a pimp, who gave me to a whore, who gave me to a bully, who gave me to a pawn-broker, who gave me to a beau.' Vol. 2.--*

44

.

My new maîter was one of those cyphers in nature, who feem born only to make up the number of mankind. The poor pittance, which pride of family fpares from the eldeft fon to fave the reft from flarving, had been just enough to purchase him a committion in the guards, in which he fignalized his prowers on the parade, and talked as big, and looked as bluff as the beft, while his campaigns were confined to St James's Park-But the prospect of a war changed his note. The irregularities, and licentiousfies of a military life now shocked his delicacy, and he exchanged for half-pay; and retaining only the convenient title of captain, refolved to puth his fortune in the gentler way of matrimony.

For this purpose he directly commenced brau, as the fair fex is somefit caught by the eye, and when that is pleased, feldom enquire farther. Accordingly he now studied nothing but fashions, as all his care was to procure elothes to keep up to them, which the narrowness of his circumstances made so difficult for him to do, that his belly mourned many a time for the farery of his back. Nor was that his only difficulty. The very expense

* As this conclution of the foregoing character is fo fhort it is inferted to preferve the connection, and fave the reader the trouble of referring.

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

expense of going into company to difplay that fanery was often as diffrefling to him as to procure it.

It was on an 'oceasion of this kind, that I came into his pofferfion. His thewy appearance, together with his being one whom every body knew, making him a convehicht faggot to fill up those musters, the only end of which is to thew the confequence of the commanding officer, by the numbers fhe can crowd together, there was hardly a genteel route in town, to which he was not invited. Such a diffinction was the height of his ambition ; accordingly, having received a card to fummon him to one the next evening, he was not able to refift the temptation of fo favourable an opportunity of fhewing himfelf to the ladies, though his finances were to low, that he had no other way to defray the expence of his chair, but by applying to fuch a place as this, where diffrefs is preved upon by profettion, and really aggravated under the deceitful appearance of momentary relief; an expedient indeed to which he was well accultonsed. As foon as it was dark, therefore, he came wrapped up in a horfe-man's coat, and pulling a laced waiftcoat out of his bofom, mortgaged it for three guineas, one of which I was.

When this weighty transaction was concluded; he returned home, and changing his drefs repaired to a coffee-houfe at the court-end of the town, where he talked over the news of the day with all the fignificant airs and importance of one in the fecret, confirming every word he faid with the authority of his coullin, this lord; or his friend, that duke; till he carelefsly outflay'd all his engagements for fupper, when a Welfh rabbit and three-penny worth of punch made him emends

16

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 47 mends for the want of a dinner, and he went home fatished.

Well as I was by this time acquainted with the, inconfiftencies of human life. I could not help being. bruck with the contradiction between the external appearance, and domeftic economy of my new mafter. The former was in all the elegance of talle and affin-. ence, while the latter was regulated by the firicieft parfimony that nature could support. He lodged in an houle, which opened into a genteel flreet, and had a back door into a blind alley, that forved him whenever he chose to go out, or come in incog. Here one room up three pair of flairs (but the name of the fireet overbalanced that, and every other inconvenience) ferved him for every purpose of life, in most of which he minileved to himfelf, andifurbed by the company of any one but his hair-dreffer, laundrefs, and taylor, at their appointed times. To all others he was constantly denied by the people of the house, who received all meffages for him, and returned proper answers. But the manner of his life will be best described by the history of the one day I was in his posseficition, the balancis of every day being invariably the fame.

As he had fat up late, it was near noon when he arofe, by which genteel indulgence he faved coals, for his fire was never lighted till after he was up. He then fallied out to breakfaft in the tarnifh'd laced frock and his thick foled floes, read the paper in the coffee house, (too foon after breakfaft to take any thing) and then walked a turn in the Park till it was time to drefs for dinner, when he went home, and finding his ftomach out of order from his laft night's debauch, and his late breakfafting, he fant the maid of the house for a bafon of of pea-foup from the cook's flop to fettle it, by the time he had taken which, it was too late for him to think of going any where to dine, though he had feveral appointments with people of the first fashion. When this frugal meal was over, he fet about the real butiness of the day. He took out and brushed his best clothes, fet his fairt to the fire to air, put on his flockings and fhoes, and then fitting down to his toilet, on which his walkes, paints, tooth-powders, and lip-falves were all placed in order, had just finished his face, when his hair-dreffer came, one hour under whole hands completed him a first rate beau.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

When he had contemplated himself for fome time with pride of heart, and practifed his looks and gefures at the glass, a chair was called, which carried him to a scene of equal magnificence and confusion. From the brilliant appearance of the company, and the ease and felf-complacency in all their looks, it should have formed that there was not one poor or unhappy perfon among them. But the cafe of my mafter had convinced me what little faith is to be given to appearances, as I also found upon a nearer view, that many of the gayest there were in no better a condition than he.

Having reconnoitred one another fufficiently to lay in a fund for remarks, and bandied about the common cant of compliments, the company fat down to cards, when the looks of many of them foon underwent a change. For prudential reafons my mafter always deolined engaging in parties of this nature, but this night all his address could not excuse him. A lady, whom he had dreffed at for a confiderable time, happening to come late unluckily wanted one, and foring him idle woel2 would take no apology. He complied therefore, with the best grace he could, and invoking fortune with more ferveney than he had ever prayed to heaven, cut in; when, chancing to fall against her, her superior luck or skill, aided not a little by his anxiety, foon stripped him of every shilling in his pocket, and fent him home in a pensive mood, to study ways and means for raising another supply; and, on this occasion, I followed the smiles of fortune, and entered into the fervice of the winner.

49

CHAP. VIII.

History of CHRYSAL'S new mistrefs. She is brought into distrefs by her beauty, from which a lucky interview relieves her. The danger of arguing in favour of inclination against reason. Her friend puts her to school to learn manners, and afterwards marries her. His family shew impotent refentment, at which he is so enraged that he makes his will, by which he leaves her his whole fortune, and then dies. An uncommon instance of the good nature of the world.

THOUGH my late maîter had put the beft face he could upon the matter, and excufed his breaking up the party at the end of the first rubber, on a pretence of being taken fuddenly fick, my miltrefs faw through him. 'Sick, indeed! (faid she, laughing) hah! hah! hah! poor eaptain! I do not doubt but you are, and that at heart! I faw it coming upon you, ever fince the first deal, when I held four by honours! but I don't wonder at it. A full rubber was too much. Vol. IV.

Digitized by Google

Two guineas and an half are no trifle to fome peeple ?-----

Two or three other visits, which she had to pay that evening, prevented her making a new party, she only flaid to tell the flory of the captain's sickness to every one she knew in the room, who all joined in the laugh against him.

I fee you are flocked at fuch an inflance of infenfibility; but if you will reflect a moment, you will find you have no reafon. Though poverty is attended with many real evils, yet when the worft of them are voluntarily encountered to gratify vanity, the pity, otherwife due to it, is juftly turned into contempt; and the efforts ufed to hide it, which are always feen through, treated with ridicule and infult.

The morning after I came into the polleffion of my new miltrefs, fhe brought to conclusion an affair of a most extraordinary nature, which few women beside herfelf would have had spirit even to undertake. To explain it properly to you, it will be necessary to give you a short sketch of her story.

The gifts of nature are either a bleffing, or a curfe, according to the use made of them. My miltrefs was born in one of the lowest classes of mankind; the obfcurity of ber birth though seemed to be made amends for, by the endowments of her person and mind, which were such as raised universal admiration, from their first infant dawn. But these, tempting the licentious spoiler, like the beauty of a flower growing in the highway, lost their advantage, and proved her ruin, for want of proper care.

She had fearce paffed her childhood, when one of those female purveyers for vice, who go about like their maller.

Digitized by Google

master, feeking whom they may destroy, to the difgrace not only of their own fex, but allo of human nature, marked her out as proper for her purpofe. There was no difficulty, either in getting her into her power, or feducing her mind. The poverty of her parents made them glad to part with her, without fart her enquiry, to any one who promifed to take care of her, only to be delivered from the expence of her fupport, as it had prevented their giving her the least education to form her manners, or infpire her mind with principles of virtue. Such a fubject was exactly fuited for to vile an agent to work upon. She took her home, dreffed her up decently, and teaching her what account to give of herfelf, profituted her, while the could make any profit of her, and then turned her adrift upon the world to live as well as the could, on the earning of fin and wretchednefs.

I must not attempt to describe the life of a common. .profitute ! it is too horrible ! fhe had run through the lowest scenes of it for some time, when fortune one night threw into her way one of those old debilitated debauchees, who indulge in the speculation after they are pash the practice of vice. Something in her air and manner, as the picked him up, ftruck him. He took her to a tavern, where he was still more pleased with her uncommon finartness and vivacity. 'I am cloved (faid he, to himfelf) with the grofs ignorance of the women of the town ! I hate the impertment airs of virtue, which those of better education give themselves! 1'll therefore unite those qualifications, which feparately please me in both, in this young creature. who can never offend me by pretences to virtue, at the fame time E 2. that that the excellence of her understanding will receive, and reward me with the fruits of, the best education."

. Digitized by Google

ŚΕ

There was novelty in the whim; and therefore he refolved to carry it into execution. He took her home with him, and fending for the molt eminent mafters in every part of polite education, put her under their care, and incited their application by most liberal promifes of reward.

Young as the was, and hackneyed in every vicious habit, the had a fufficient fende of the change in her way of life, not to forfeit the advantage by any mifbhaviour or neglect. On the contrary, the applied herfelf fo clofely to every, thing taught her, and fhewed a difpolition fo defirous of improvement in every fenfe. that her benefactor, proud of the difeernment, which could discover such talents, under so great disadvantages, became enamoured of the effects of his own benevolence and care. ' I have at length found (would he fay to himfelf) what I have hitherto fought in vain, a woman that can make me happy ! Her wit and under-. flanding will enliven the hour of heavinels; while a falle parade of virtue will never throw a damp on pleafantry and mirth. What though her birth is obfcure ! are we not all defcended from one common flock? is the blood of a prafant lefs pure than that of a prince? youth, that flould be charged to fate that led her into temptation, before the had reafon to relift it !-----But all these feeming disadvantages are now turned in her favour. Her experience in the ways of the world will make it impossible to deceive her again. Her confcioufnefs of the meannefs of her own family will give her a proper fenfe of the honour of being admitted into mine:

Digitized by Google

51.

mine; and fave me from the intolerable plague of having hor pedigree rung in my ears every hour. Her, youth and luxuriance of conflictution will allo fupply to our children the defects which too eager a purfuit of pleafure may have made in mine. Let those who are dependent on the world, regard its centure; I am above it, and will purfue my own happines wherever it leads me.'

There is nothing more dangerous, than feeking for arguments in favour of inclination against reason. Trifles, light as air, will be admitted as the weightiest proofs of that which is willed to be proved : and palliatives, barely possible, answer objections in their nature unanswerable. He had taken a liking to her ! he had taken it into his head to fecure the gratification of that liking, by marrying her : and a very little arguing with himself in this manner foon convinced him, not only of the expediency of fuch a marriage to his happines: but also of the obligation he was under of coing that juliee to her merit, and his own judgment. The confequence may be easily concluded. He married her, as he profession.

But the cafe was very different with the world; which, far from feeing the force of his arguments, langhed at him for being taken thus in a finare of his own making. His own family in particular beheld her with eyes perbaps not lefs blinded by interest; than his were by inclination; and depreciating the merit she really had, reprefented his marriage as the mere effect of vicious dotage.

Nothing is fo ill judged as to flow impotent refentment. It only provokes a return of none effect; and

E 3

Digitized by GOOGLC

makes

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

makes a wound incurable which otherwife might have healed of itfelf. Incenfed that they fhould prefume to cenfure actions, which they could not controul, he directly made his will, by which he gave away the inheritance of his aneeftors from his own blood, leaving his whole fortune to his wife, as a teltimony of his unaltered regard for her, and to fhew his referement to them; foon after which he died.

This was more than her most fanguine hopes could ever have rifen to. She was in the prime of life; and poffeffed of a tortune to afford her all its pleafures. These advantages (and I should add her beauty, which was in the perfection of ripened bloom) naturally attracted a number of admirers of different kinds, and with as different views, who all thought themfelves fure of her, from the circumitances of her past life. Needy adventurers (fuch as my late mafter) paid court to her fortune, in the matrimonial way; while her beauty attracted the more dangerous address of those, who meant no more than pleafure. But the was guarded against both. She had tasted something of the fweets of virtuous reputation, and knew the value of it too well to forfeit it entirely again by compliance with the latter ; and her pride and experience fet her above all the fehrmes of the former-

She lived thus for fome time in the higheft happines, of which the had any idea; for the was a ftranger to that falle delicacy, which creates itfelf imaginary uneafineffes, and palls the enjoyment of prefent pleafures. She was admitted into good company, where her behaviour, if not abfolutely approved of, was fiill received with good-natured allowances, as much better than might have been expected from the circumfances of her

Digitized by Google

. 55 her life; and the herfelf treated with tendernels, to encourage her to perfeverance in fo uncommon an amendment. But this happinels was too great to last long undifturbed.

CHAP. IX.

The common confequence of over-doing things. Her. bulband's relations find out a flaw in bis will. The comfort of baving good lawyers to keep up a client's spirits. For the advantage of baving two frings to ber bow, be enters into an engagement of marriage, under an beavy penalty. The event. of ber law-fuit bews the prudence of this precaution. She is caft ; ber lover flies off, and fle fues bim for the penalty of his engagement. He begs the money among bis friends, and then, by a nice fineffe, plays ber own game back upon ber, and flings ber off with balf. CHRYSAL changes bis fervice.

IT daily happens, that men defeat their own intentions, by carrying them too far. Hurried away by his paffions, her hufband, in making his will, had exceeded the power vefted in him by the law, and fo by ftriving to give her more than he had a right, really gave her much lefs. But it was a confiderable 'time before his family recovered fufficiently from the aftonishment and confusion with which such a stroke overwhelmed them, to perceive this, and be able to purfue proper measures for taking advantage of it.

The first notice my miltrefs received of this affair, was by an offer they made her to refer their claim to private private decision, in order to avoid the expense and trouble of a law-fuit. But though the former part of her life had imprefied her with horror at the very name of the law, fhe would not liften to fuch a proposal, without taking proper advice, the refult of which may be eafily judged.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

Lawyers will never lofe a good client for want of giving hopes. Her's perfuaded her to fully of the juflice of her caule, and gave her fuch politive affurance of fuccels; that the refolved to fpare no expence to obtain it. Though right and wrong are fo effentially different from each other, they yet are fometimes involwed in fuch intricacies, by the industry of those whole profession it is to diffinguish between them, that it is difficult to know which is which. It was fo in this eafe. They had raifed fuch clouds, that reason could not fee through them; and fo every one was left to fpeak according to inclination.

While matters were in this fituation, one of her admirers thought it a proper time to pufh his fortune with her. His rank and expectations in life railed, 'him above the neceffity of fuch a felteme; but avarice will floop to any thing; and he would gladly have taken her, with all her faults, for the fake of her fortune, the certainty of her eftablishing her right to which he had taken eare to be well affured of by fages learned in the law, before he laid fiege to her. This however he was far from avowing. He pleaded the most diffurerefled love, and prefled for a return with all the ardeney of defire.

But though the could not do fo much injuffice to her charms, as to doubt their power of infpiring fuch a gaffion, the positively refused to liften to any proposals of marriage, till her law-fuit fhould be decided, from a generous fear of involving him in inconveniences, which her lawyers politively affured her could never happen; as he, with equal generolity, founded on the like affurances, offered to marry her, while it was flill depending; whereas the truth of the matter was with both, that he thought he could make a better bargain, as the knew fhe must a worfe, if it fhould be concluded till every thing was abfolutely fettled.

of

57

They had played this game upon each other for fome time, when a difficient word dropped by one of her lawyers, as the day of decifion drew near, determined her to change her fyftem, and make fure of fomething for fear of the worft. Accordingly, the next time her lower visited her, on his repeating his professions of the violence of his pathon, and offering as a proof of its difinterestedness to enter into a mutual engagement of marriage, as foon as the fuit should be ended one way or other, under the penalty of a large fum of money on the refuser. She let herfelf be overcome by such an inflance of funcerity, and taking him at his word, figned the engagement directly.

The event juftified this caution; for after all the alfurances of fuccefs, by which flue had been led on by her lawyers to run into every expense they could devife, juffice appeared fo flrongly in favour of her opponents, that flue was caft; and a confiderable part of the eftate of her hufband adjudged to return directly to his family, and the reft after her death.

Though what remained to her was more than fufficient to fupport her in the genteeleft manner, fhe could not but feel at first a fall from fo high hopes; but her fpirit had been too well exercised in the beginning of, her her life, to yield long to any thing; and the had almolt got the better of it, when fomething that piqued her refertment, roufed her effectually. Among all the friends, who came on this occasion to gratify the infolence of condoling her misfortune, the was not a little furprifed never to fee the face of her lover. As the could not be at a loss for the mean motive of fuch behaviour, the might poffibly have treated it with the contempt it deferved, had not neceffity urged her to thew a warmer refertment.

Digitized by Google

GHRYSAL: OR, THE

The expences of her law-fuit had involved her in debts (for fhe never lowered her living, depending on the affurances given her of fuccefs) which were now demanded with an importunity that perplexed her. This was just at the time when fhe took notice of the defertion of her lover. The urgency of her creditors therefore fuggefled it to her, to call upon him to fulfil his engagement of marriage, which his conduct convinced her he would forfeit the penalty rather than do, by which means the fhould punith him for his rafhnefs, and extricate her telf from her difficulties at the fame time; for had the thought that he would fulfil it, there was nothing the would not have fuffered fooner than link her fate to him.

There is fomething in a woman's calling upon a man to marry her, fo contrary to those notions of delicacy, on which the fuperior class of the female liex value themfelves, that perhaps no other woman of her, rank could have prevailed upon herfelf to do it. But fhe had not been born in, nor bred up with expectations of that rank; her notions therefore were of a coarfer complexion; and though fhe had learned the external modes of behaviour, the trick of complaifance.

58-

fance, the had been put to fehool too late in life, to change her fentiments fo far as to make her think it neceffary to facrifice fo powerful motives as refentment and intereft, to a delicacy that appeared to her merely

59

The moment, therefore, the thought occurred, fhe applied once more to her lawyer; and by his advice wrate a letter to her lawyer, in which fhe directly claimed the performance of his engagement. But as this was no more than his heart told him he must expect, (for he would have done the very fame thing himfelf) he was prepared how to answer her. Accordingly he wrote to her in the most artful manner, excusing his not having been to wait upon her, fince the fatal decifion of her law-fuit, on account of the pain he must feel at feeing her, when he had loft all hopes of ever calling her his ; for as her generofity would not permit her to marry, while there was only a possibility of fuch a miffortune, he could not fuppofe, that her fenfe of honour and juffice would now, when it had actually happened: and for this reafon he defired that fhe should pleafe to fend him his engagement, not that it was of any confequence, as he would return her's, to whom he wifhed the highest happiness in every scene and view of life ..... Such a refusal was just what the wanted! the therefore infantly commenced a fuit at law with him to recover the penalty of his engagement, which he had thus forfeited to her.

The care he had taken himfelf, to make the engagement as binding as poffible, precluding every hope of defeating her claim ; and his knowledge of her temper convincing him that it would be in vain to attempt pre. vailing on her to drop it, now fhe had once begun, he had had recourse to an expedient to extricate him from this difficulty, of the fame mean kind with that which brought it upon him. Accordingly, though he was well enough able to pay the penalty himfelf, as he did not chuse to fulfil his engagement by marrying, he put on a poor face, and went beggnig ot all his relations for their affiftance, pleading pove I y and alledging the difgrace it would bring upon the whole family if he fhould be obliged to marry fuch a woman, whom he reprefented in the blackeft colours, exaggerating every circumstance of her life. Though this might justly have been retorted upon himself, for ever thinking of her, they took pity on his diffrefs, and raifed the money for him, by a general contribution.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

60

Such fuccels encouraged him to hope for further, and try the force of his eloquence upon my miltrefs. For this purpole he defired an interview, which fhe had with much reluctance confented to give him, the next morning after I came into her poffeffion.

I had feen vice and folly in a variety of shapes, but never did the human heart appear to me in fo contemptible a light, as his upon this occasion. He began his attack with flattery, profeffing the highest respect, and lamenting in the most passionate terms, that the difficulty of his circumfances would not permit him to have the happinels of marrying her; and appealed to her generolity and juffice, as before, for a release from an engagement, that it must be the ruin of them both to fulfil. But all was in vain. She fcarce deigned to make him any answer; and that only to tell him, that his professions and arguments were equally ineffectual to alter a refolution, which the baseness of his behaviour alone had made her take Not quite discouraged though 3 though by fuch a repulle, he inftantly changed his method of application. He threw himfelf at her feet, implored her compation on his poverty, and offered, as the utmost it would permit him to do, to pay her down half the penalty directly, concluding with faying, that if he refused to accept of that, he had no other refource, but even to fulfil his engagement, and marry her.

This was fighting the devil at his own weapons. The mention of marriage was a ftroke fhe was not prepared for. Startled at the thought, therefore, as fhe knew not what defpair might drive him to, fhe agreed to his propofal, and fo they divided the money between them (for he prudently pocketed the other half himfelf, as he could not think of offering fuch an affront to his friends as to return any part of their bounty) and was equal gainers by a bargain, in which each out-witted the other.

Though what my miftrefs got fell fhort of her expediation, it answered the double end of gratifying her refertment, and paying her debts, on the latter of which occasions, I left her fervice.

F

Vot. IV.

CHAP

61'

CHAP. X.

CHENSAL makes fome out-of the-way remarks on matrimony. Defoription and biflory of his new master. CHENSAL vindicates his using a common expression. His master's first rise from a beggar to a foot-boy. He gains his master's fawour, of which he makes the use natural to be expected from his first education. Some account of a relation of his PRINCIPAL'S. The danger of giving advice. CHENSAL'S master infinuates himfelf into the COLONEL'S liking, and underminus the Principal, in his regard.

I HAVE observed in the course of this account of my last misters, that you have been shocked at the thought of a map's marrying a woman in her circumftances. To you, who view life only by the light of reason, it must certainly appear most unaccountable; but better acquaintance with the ways of the world would reconcile you to that, and many other things equally gross and shocking in speculation.

Marriage is a mutual truft of honour. A man's marrying a woman therefore who has loft her honour, is trufting his whole fortune to a bankrupt, who has no fecurity to give for that truft; a fool-hardinefs that must proceed from either a confeiousfiels of having himfelf no honour to lofe, a total different principles from the reft of mankind, as a proof of being above their prejudices. Where her honour indeed has been loft to himfelf, juffice makes it a duty upon him to repair her lofs by marriage; but then that very marriage is a punifiment for his erime, as it must want the effential happinels of confidence; for he will always be ready to fufpect, that the difpolition which betrayed her into error with him, may have the fame effect with others. Nor is this fufpicion unnatural.

by

I fee you would argue from the habitual; avowed incontinence of man, that this truth of honour is not equal, and therefore cannot be obliging. But this is judging without duly confidering the fubject. Chaftity is in its nature a virtue equally the duty of both fexes to observe, and with regard to society in general, the violation of it is equally criminal in both; but in those nearer connections of life, the interest of which is the more immediate object of human attention, the confequences of that violation in woman are attended with fo much greater inconveniences than in man, that in reflect to them, 'the crime is obvioufly lefs pardonable in her, than in him ; and for this reafon, this virthe of chaftity is made in a peculiar manner the honour of woman: while the honour of man is placed in other virtues, from which fhe receives as much advantage, as he does from her chaftity; and therefore the truft of honour is mutual and equal .---- In dillinguishing thus between honour and virtue, I fpeak according to the notions of mankind; in their own nature, there is no diffinction between them.

There was fomething in the whole appearance of the perfor to whom my miftrefs paid me away, that made me expect to fee a character of a caft, which I had not yet met with amoilg mankind. His looks were fly, methodical and plodding. Practice had fixed upon his paffive face the hollow varnith of a fervile finile; and an over-acted affectation of polite behaviour, made his natural aukwardnefs truly ridiculous. But under all this, I could fee a depth of delign, and a latitude of principle equal to any great attempt, the fuecels of which fhould in the opinion of the world determine the quality of that greatnefs, whether villainy or virtue.

F 2

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

The knowledge of his life, which is neceflary to explain his character, and account for the principles upon which he acted confiftently his manifold part, will be comprifed in a few words. Sprung from the dregs of the people, and turned loofe upon the world, to fhift for himfelf, as foon as he was able to crawl, he took his fland about the houfe of a perfon in bufinels, where he hardly earned a morfel of broken victuals by running of errands, cleaning fhoes, and fuch other offices, as are performed by thole fervants of fervants.

I fee you wonder at my faying he was fprung from the dregs of the people, as if difference of rank could make any alteration in the effential equality of human nature; but without entering into a difcuffion of undetermined points, on both fides of which much has been faid with equal firength of reafon, the beft obfervation of the power of early example to imprefs those principles, which are to govern the future life, will fufficiently juffify my using the expression here.

The patience, with which he was obliged to bear the cuffs and kicks of thofe worft of tyrants, who always wantonly revenge ten fold upon their wretched underlings, whatever they fuffer themfelves, taught him that hypocrify and abject fubmiffion, to every thing that might any way ferve his convenience, which afterwards proved the ground-work of his fortune ; as the example of his parents, who got their living by retailing ing to the poor the means it necessaries of life, initiated him to early into every species of low fraud and chione, that they became absolutely natural to him, and invariably ruled the conduct of his life.

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES of & GUINEA.

He had been fome time in this hopeful course of edueation, when an accident opened him an opportunity of fiewing what a progress he had made in it. A brother of the perion about whole house he picked up the fraps that kept him alive, happening to fee one of the fervants beating him unmercifully, interfered from mere humanity, and faved him. The marks he bore of his beating railed a curiofity to know how he had deferred it; when he gave fo feeningly innocent, and pitiable an account of himfelf, and attributing the fervants cruelty for artfully to his having refuted to do femething for him, which was improper for him to do, that the voung gentleman believed him ;, and taking compation on his difficia, admitted him into the family to wait upon himfelf, by which he was delivered from his dependence on the other fervants, and protected from their future infults.

The humility, with which he behaved himfelf, in this first flep of his advancement, his affiduity, and feening attachment to his mafter, foon won his good spinion for far, that he diffeenfed with his attendance, and fent kim to fchool, where he applied himfelf fo clofely, and made fuch a proficiency, that his mafter took him into his own bufinefs; in which his fobriety, diligence, and obedient temper gained his confidence fo entirely, that as foon as ever he thought him capable, he admitted him into fellowfhip with himfelf, and abfelutely refigned the management of his whole bufinefs to him.

F3

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

It may naturally be supposed, that he did not neglect to improve fuch an opportunity of practifing the leffons he had learned in his youth. He fecreted the profits of all the bufinels, which his principal was not. indifpenfibly obliged to be perfonally engaged in ; he fupplanted him with fuch as he could of his cuftomers : he cheated of confiderable fums of money fuch others, as long experience of his (the Principal's) honefty had put off their guard with him ; and took every occasion of infinuating to the world, under the molt effectual difguife of friendly concern, and complaint, his negligence and incapacity; at the fame time, that he profelled to himfelf the most implicit respect and obedience, and feemed ambitious of fhewing his gratitude and attachment by performing the fame fervile offices, which had been his first occupation about him-

But all this was trifling in comparison with the froke he made against him, in his own family. There was a near relation of his principal's, who was indebted to his friendly affistance, for the first flep of his rife to the rank of a colonel in the army. Nature had been lavish to him, in the endowments of mind and body; but pride marred the bleffing, and turned them all to his difadvantage. Confidence in the external graces of his perfon made him neglect the improvement of his understanding, while an affectation of fingularity, which is always affumed as a mark to hide real ignorance, made him fet his own opinion in opposition to the effablished judgment of mankind.

As the conduct of fuch a man muft neceffarily be irregular, his relation and friend, my mafter's principal, exerted the authority of thole characters, and frequently reproved him in the fincerity and well-meaning of his his heart. The notion that this liberty, which when properly taken is the higheft proof of regard, was affumed on the feore of obligation, gave offence to the captious haughtiness of the colonel's temper, and estranged an esteem, which it ought to have confirmed.

A

١

This was an opportunity for my mailer to difplay his talents. He fludied the temper of the colonel, and paid court to his caprices. He cringed to his haughtinels, bore his infults, and ministered to his vices, with an implicit fubmiffion to his fuperior fense and judgment, which he received as the only standard of right and wrong.

The contraft between this complaifance, and the fuperiority which the colonel thought his relation affumed by giving him advice, infenfibly transferred to my ma-... fher that regard, which his principal loft. As this was what he had all along aimed at, he emitted nothing to widen the breach by infinuations, fo artfully conveyed as to aggravate the offence taken by the colonel, and yet if repeated would bear a fenfe directly oppofite, and feem to fpring entirely from friendly concern, fhould a reconciliation between them bring his practices to light. But an event, that he could not fcheme for, removed every fuch apprehenfion, and rivitted his influence beyond his most fanguine hopes.

CHÀP.

67.

6¥

CHAP. XL.

Further account of the COLONEL. CHRYAL's mafter, in conjunction with a female afficiate proper for his purpose, completes his scheme of alienating the COLONEL's regard from his family, of which he gives a proof of a most extraordinary nature. A remarkable instance of CHRYAL's master's ter's talents for a particular kind of wit, with a scheking account of the worthy manner in which he and his fair associate acquitted themselves of the trust reposed in them by the COLONEL.

VAIN of the beauty of his perion, the colonel prided himfelf in an opinion, that there was no woman whofevirtue could relik his addreffes. This felf-conceit, which the frailty of the lower clafs of females had first given rife to, was confirmed by his fuccefs with one, whole fortune and education thould have fecuted her against his attacks. The glory of fuch a conquest fariffied his vanity; and the pleasure of having her on his own terms fo endeared her to him, that he thought not of any other. One thing only gave him concern about her; which was, in whole care he thould leave her; when the buliness of the campaign called him into the field.

But in this he was not long at a lofs. The humble implicit attachment of my mafter, pointed him out as the perfon, in every refpect molt proper for fuch a truft. To him, therefore, he committed her at his departure, hugging himfelf in the happiness of having fuch a mistrefs, and fuch a friend.

The

The nature of this truft neceffarily brought on an intimacy between my mafter and his charge. Intimacies between the fexes are dangerous in any circumflances; but in their's, where fhe could not even make pretence to that virtue which could be her only guard, the confequence is obvious. From this time, they joined their interefts, and laid their heads together to eltrange him from his own family, particularly my mafter's Principal, who in cafe of death had the firft claim, from law and nature, to his fortune.

In carrying on this fcheme, they played into each other's hands with fuch addrefs at his return, that when he was going to the next campaign, he made a will, by which he gave not only his own large acquifitions, but also the inheritance of his ancestors between them, in fuch a manner as plainly shewed a wrong mind, and supported his bequest with such reasons, as were an infult to the laws and religion of his country; at the fame time, that they perpetuated the infamy of these to whom it was made, by arguing expressly in favour of the vices, which had gained them this mark of regard; and this will, the fubstance of which fatisfied them for the circumstances, he left in the hands of my master.

In this fituation matters flood between the three, when I came into his pofferfion. When he had finished the drudgery of the day, he went as usual to spend the evening agreeably with his charge.

There was one species of what is called wit, upon his expertness in which my master valued himself not a little. This was telling a fictitious flory with so grave a face, and corroborating it with fuch plausible circumflances as to raife the hearer's anxiety, and then to laugh laugh at the caly faith that could be fo taken in. Low as the merit of fuch wit was, at the beft, in him it had hone at all. His fictions were no better than downright lies, defitute of imagination, or humour, and corroborated with nothing but new-coiled oaths and impreeations, fit to afford entertainment only to the damned.

Digitized by Google

With an effay of this kind he refolved to entertain his miftrefs this evening. Exerting therefore all his command of countenance, 'My deareft love, (faid be with a melanchely look, and deep-drawn figh, as he entered the room) I have received bad news, blaft my eyes! there has been a battle, in which our fool?-----' Has not been killed ! (Interrupted file, flutching the word out of his mouth.) that is bad news indeed; But another battle may afford better.'-----

"Curfed, you fhould fay! But is there no way to be thought of, to prevent it? Could not proper application be made to the furgeons ?"

" All is too late ! his leg was taken off directly-----; and the danger entirely over when the account came sway; as you may fee by his letter, in which he writes me word — , that he hopes to be at home with us, in a month, to leave us no more. En i what have I dong with his letter ? — It fhould be in this pocket ! I certainly have left it behind me, in my confusion — But you'll fee it foon enough. He fends his lowe to you; and bids me tell you, he would have wrote to you; but was prevented by company, fo that you fee he cannot be in any danger — . But he'll make you amends. I fee how every thing will be — . He'll marry you, so foon as he returns — ; that he may introduce you into his family, who will treat you with forced civility in order to get him into their hands again. I fee very well — how every thing will happen.<sup>3</sup>

m¢

2

71

'No! that shall never happen! I hate themselves, and defpife their civility. I had rather bear the speers and infults of the world than that. Nor will I marry him, let what will be my fate! his infolent capricious humour is fcarce to be borne now; though ke curbs it, because I am at my liberty to leave hime. What would it then be, were I to be his flave for life? I had rather feign penitence, and throw myself on the compatition of my own family, than plunge into such misery. Marriage on any terms is a flate I defpile, but with him I abjure it.

This paffion was fuch a triamph to my_mafter, that he could keep his countenance no longer. 'Hah! hah! hah! a fair humbug, damn me! (faid he, burfting out into a horfe-laugh) your humble fervant, madam ! I thought you could not be taken in. Hah! hah! hah! a fair humbug, damn me.'

'Taken in ! (faid flie, vexed at being played upon, but more pleafed that it was no worfe) how san you take delight in fach a low-lived trick ? If I qould not flow shew my wit, in a better manner, I am fure I would give up all pretentions to it.'

CHRYSAL: OR THE

"All pure fpight and malice ? But don't fret for it. Come, we'll kils and friends, and think no more of the matter ! only remember not to brag another time that you cannot be taken in though ! hah ! hah ! hah !

Every thing being thus made up, their conversation for the reft of the evening was fuch as may be fuppoled between perfons of their caft, and in their fituation. They gloried in the fuccels of their fchemes upon their common dupe, the colonel; they formed plans for foending his fortune, should any lucky accident put an end to his life ; they ridiculed the pride and felf-fufficiency of which they had taken advantage; and concluded in their usual way, with proving in each other's arms the justnels of his confidence in their fidelity.

CHAP. XIL

CHRYSAL's mafter receives an account of the death of the Colonel. He finds, after much deliberation. shat be cannot fling bis worthy affociate out of the whole spoil, and therefore prudently resolves to fbare it with her by a marriage, of which he draws a comfortable picture. He urges bis fuit, and the firives to evade it by arguments confiftent wilb both their characters. He cairies bis point in a particular manner.

BUT all this harmony was soon diffurbed for ever, by the accomplishment of the very schemes it was founded on, which was much nearer than they imagined.

3

72

23

١

gined. The first news my master received on his return home the next morning, was that the colonel had been killed in a late battle. This was an interesting event ! he directly locked himfelf up in his clofet, and taking out the will though he had often read it before, fludied every fyllable of it over and over, to try if there was any polibility for him to fling his own and the colonel's common miltrefs, and get the whole fortune himself ; but he had the mortification to find that this exceeded all his fagacity, and that the whole will muß fland or fall together.

After fome, not the most pleasing meditation, therefore, ' And fa! (faid he, biting his nether hip, and turning up his eyes, with an execration, too herrid to be repeated) I have been labouring all this while to get a fortune for this brimitone! A very pretty reward truly, for fupplanting my best benefactor! it were better for me that even he had it, than the; for then I might not only enjoy my thare of it as it goes, along with him; but also very probably cheat him out of the most of it, in the end. What though I am to have it after her death! may not the live as long as I? Belide, I have made away with the greatest part of the money, and fo am liable to be blown up and undone, whenever the thinks proper to call it in; for I know too much of her to expect that the should thew favour to any one, when once in her power. No ! that fhall never be ! I have it in my power to fet afide the whole unnatural, nonfentical will, and I will do it, if the refutes to come into terms with me. Such a facrifice of my own interreft to gratitude and honefty, as this will appear, will gain me to great reputation, that I fhall make a better fortune myfelf, in a little time ; and as to what I have Vel. IV. embezzled. G

·3

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

embezzied, I know by experience, that I can fink that upon my wife principal at a proper time, as I have some more before now ; fo that after all, I may find honefty to be the best policy, as the faying is Well ! be that as it will, I am refolved to be honest to myfelf first, and do that which shall ferve my own interest best; without regard to proverb or opinion. Let me comder then ! fuppofe I marry her ; and fo get policifion of all at once. But the devil of it is, that I must take her into the bargain ; and I know her too well for that, if I could help it. She may most likely ferve me the fame trick, with fome body elfe, that the has ferved this fool with me; once a whore and always a whore. However, I must take my chance for that. Cunning as the is, the thall not cuckold me eatily. If I am not a-match for he, fhe must be able to outwit the devil himfelf; fo happy come lucky, I'll e'en venture.'

Having reasoned himself into this prudent resolution, he would lose no time; but went to her directly to carry it into execution. As soon as he met her, 'I have brought you news now (faid he) in carnelt. News, that will be either good or bad, according as you take it.'

'Pha! (anfwered the flightingly) this is more of your wit, I suppose. But for heaven's fake leave off making a fool of yourself, and teazing me. I am quite fick of such fluff.'

'Strike me to the centre; (replied he paffionately) but I am ferious. I have this moment received an account, that the colonel is actually dead. He was killed in the late battle.'

The look with which he faid this, had more weight with her than all the oaths and imprecations he could utter :

Digitized by Google

74

ş

74

stter ; for much as he was mafter of his countenance, he could not conceal the agitation of his mind. ' Dead 1 (interrupted file, cagerly) thank heaven! then all my fears are over.'

. 'Aye! (replied he dryly) but it is well if your hopes are not also over with them.'

"How? What do you mean? Has he not made a will by which all his fortune comes directly to me ? For heaven's fake do not torture me in this manner." "Yest he has made a will, it is true. But don't you know that the last letter I received from him revoked it, fo that every thing goes now, to his family, for he lived not long enough to make another after he received his wound ; though that is no great lols to. you, for from what he faid when he was dying, it would not have been much in your favour.'

"But did not you promife me, that you would fupprefs that revocation, in cafe any thing of this kind should happen; which you faid you had it in your power to do, as your principal was fool enough to promile you, that he would never open any letters that fould come directed to you from the army, as he had aright to do, by which means it had luckily escaped coming to his knowledge.

'Perhaps I may have faid to ! but do you think L have no more confeience, than to conceal fuch a thing ; and rob'a man to whom I am under fo great obligations ??

'Confeience! For heaven's fake, I conjuré you again, do not torture me any longer. Speak of con-Elence to those who do not know you. I have had fufficient proof, that your interest is your conference i and this will furely determine you to ferve me, as you, ferate forve paurfelf at the fame sime. Is not all to come to you at my death.

G 2

GHRYSAL: OR, THE

79

* But what am I to do in the mean while? Cents then ! as you fay yourknow me fo well, I'll offer you a fair propolal, that shall make it my prefent thereft (for that is what I regard) to ferve you; and your future intereft, on which you lay for great a firels; to ferve me. Suppole, we join our interefts in all things, and marry. By this expedient I shall come directly into the erjoyment of the fortune; and your children will isherit it.?

"." Marry ! (exclaimed the, flarting in furprife) what could put likels a firauge thought into your head, who know my fentiments on that unnatural flate of fuper-Rition and flavery? No ! that of all'things, I can never come into. But, I fee you are at your humbugging a. gain. The professions, and oaths of friendship, you have fo often made me .-. Were all but wind, " (anfwered he) ' and have left no trace behind them. But this kind of talking answers no end. The whole depends on the one word, by which you answer me this short question, Will you marry me? Or will you not? If you confent, I will fecrete the papers, that fet afide the will, and fo we shall share the fortune between us. If you refuse, I will give them up to his family, who will directly defeat your claim, and then you may follow for your living that libertine way of life you appear to fond of; for I have no notion of damning my chargeter in this world, and my foul in the next, to ferve any other but myfelf. Gonfider therefore before you fpeak, as I will go directly from you to them if you refuse me."

Such a menace was not ineffectual to one who knew

ADVENTURES or A GUINEAL 77. him fo well. 'Will pothing elfe fatisfy you?' (replied the, burfling into tears) 'No part of the fortune; and' to continue as we are at prefent, man and wife in every thing but the curfed ceremony.'

<sup>4</sup> No! that ceremony is the very thing I want, and nothing elfe; becaufe that only can give me a right to your fortune; for as to your perfon, I would not have you think I fet any value on that! I have long finge had enough of it: and for fharing the fortune, I am refolved I will have all, or none; and this is the reafon, why I make you fuch an offer; for otherwife, I affure you, I hate marriage as much as you poffibly can. So let me have your answer directly, for I will not triffe thus a moment longer.<sup>2</sup>

The manner in which he faid this left her no room to doubt his refolution. 'Well then, (replied the, fighing) 'if you will have it fo, it' muft be fo; and I confent, because I cannot help it. But when is this bleffed marriage to be folemnized?'

'As for that, I am in no more hurry than you. All I defire i, that you will directly fign a promife of marriage, whenever I think proper to call upon you. I'll go this inflant, and draw it up; and leave you to confider how much better this is for us both than to have difagreed, and let all go to his family.'

He waited not for a reply; nor was long before he returned with the deed, which the figued with evident seluctance

÷. :

CHAP.

C'HRYSAL: OR, THE ### CHAP. XIII.

Account of the methods which CHRYSAL's mafter took to obviate the effects of his Principal's refentment, with the characteriftic couversation that passed between them, on the former's avoying the Colonel's will. CHRYSAL's master over shoots his mark, and provokes his Principal to do more than be ever intended. An uncommon instance of the justice of the world. CHRYSAL's master obliges the lady to court him in her turn, and at length marries her. The consequence of such a marriage, and fruits of the fuccefs of all their schemes.

HIS point being fettled, the next thing was to prochece the colonel's will, the thought of doing which gave him fome alarm in fpite of all his fortitude, as it would be throwing off the mark he had worn all his hile, and declaring war with his Principal, who he judged from kimfelf, would not fail to publish to the world the mannels of his original, and the milery from which his compation had railed him.

But fuch thoughts, difagreeable as they might be, could not divert him from his purpose. To difable his Principal though as far as possible from carrying his refertment any further than words, he ransathed all his papers, and took away not only fuoh as related immediately to the private transactions, between themselves, but also those of other people with whom they had been conterned in bufinels, in order to diffres his circum. Aances, and auvolve him in fuch perplexities as should hay him under a necessfity of keeping fair with him. But this precaution, like many others dictated by the fame fpirit, occalioned the very thing it was deligned to prevent.

ley

The first news of the affair was like a thunder-clap to the family of the colonel. My mafter's Principal, though, who in the course of law and nature, had the first expectations, as I have faid before, could not believe it to be true, fo high was his confidence in the honefty and attachment of my mafter. To fatisfy however the importunities of his family, he came to him. and with a look of indignation at the baleness of fuch a report, rather than apprehension of the truth of it. "I am come (faid he) to tell you a piece of news, I have ruft this moment heard, which is, that the colonel has left his whole fortune between that jade, his miltrefs. and you; and that you were prive to his will, which he left in your hands when he was going abroad. But the latter part of the flory makes me eafy about the reft ; for whatever his capricious temper might leaf him to de, I am convinced you would have no hand in fo bale an affair, nor even conceal his having fuch an intention from me a moment. I fee you are shocked at the fcandalous imputation ; but do not think I mentioneit, as if I believed it. I could not do you In much wrong."

The first imprefitions of youth can never be totally effaced. Though my matter could lay fehemes to cheat the Principal, and revile him behind his back, he had learned to look at him with an awe, when a beggar about his brother's houfe, and afterwards his fervant, that he could never after got over when in his preferior. This are added to the confusions of could out

79

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

b aus guilt, made him unable to make any anfwer for fome moments, and had wrought that change in his gountenance which the other took notice of

As foon as he could collect fpirits to fpeak, 'I--I--I. am obliged to every one, f--for their good opinion of me;' (faid he, with his eyes fixed on the ground, and faultering on at every word) ' and hope I shall not f--f--forfeit it, by accepting the favours of my. friends.'

. 'How! (interrupted the other eagerly) what canyou mean by that? You furely do not, cannot avow !'---

'As for that, Sir! (returned my mafter, plucking up a little more affurance) what I avow or difavow, is nothing to the purpole. I prefume that my moft dear and worthy friend, the colonel, had a right to leave his fortune to whom he pleafed; and that whoever he has left it to has also a right to take it, without being anfwerable to your opinion, or that of any others who may be prejudiced by you; for the world will judge better, and be fatisfied that he had fufficient reafors for what he has done.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>6</sup> And fo then, it is even fe? (replied the other, after a long paule) <sup>6</sup> and this is the return I meet for raising you from wretchednefs, and admitting you to the first place in the effeem and confidence of my heart. Cherifh a viper in your befom, and he will fting you to death. But it is beneath me to upbraid you! I leave the revenge of my wrongs to your own confeience, and the juffice of heaven; and from this moment difelaim all intercourfe with you; nor shall my lips ever more utter your name if I can help it. The fight of you is a pain to me! I will fend a perfon to take my affairs out:

Digitized by GOOGLC

81

out of your hands, and defire you will directly provide yourfelf another habitation ! Unhappy for me was the day, when I fift gave fhelter to your milery in mine? - Saying this he turned away without waiting for a copy, and left the room.

This infolent behaviour (for fo my mafter called its as foon as the other was gone) was fuch an affront to His honour, as in his opinion cancelled all obligations, and justified every thing he had done, or could do as gainst him. Giving vent to his refentment therefore in a burft of blafphemous executions, he proceeded in the execution of his fchemes, with this improvement, that to obviate the imputations of bale diffionefly and ingratitude, which his own confeience told him his Principal would publish to the world against him, he loaded him with every fcandal that his inventive malice could fuggeft. But inftead of answering his purpose, produced the very contrary effect, as it put him under a necellity of laving open things to vindicate his own character, which indignant fhame of having placed his confidence for unworthily would otherwife have made him conceal : and in this inflance the world was not dazzled by fuccess, but directly paid his villainy with the infamy'it deferved.

As for the lady, failion made it necessary for her to put on all the minickry of woe, in which the perified most decently for the ufual time; at the end of which the found her hufband, that was to be, fo flack in his addreffes, that the was obliged to court him, as fuch an unfettled life was equally contrary to her interest and inclinations. This unfwered a double end. It gratified his vanity, (for he took care to make it known) and feemed to obviate the credit of the contract between them, t :em, fhould it even happen to be diffeovered. Accordingly he kept off a little longer; and at length confented with the affected irresolution of a man of the most delicate principles and fense of honour.

Digitized by GOOGLC

CHRYSAL: On, THE

As he only got a legal right by his marriage to what he was already in poffethian of, he foon grew tired of the flate, the circumflances of which, in his particular cafe, could not be very pleasing to any man. However, to avoid the evils of which he was most immediately afraid, he went to live in the country, where he admitted his wife to fee nobody but those he approved, and in company with himfelf. Nor was he faitsfied that his utmost vigilance could prove effectual, as he had had experience of the looseness of her principles, and her expertness in all the arts of intrigue.

Their fituation, in these circumstances, may be easily conceived. Continual fulficions, quarrels, and recriminations aggravated their mutual dislike to the most rancarous hatred, and made their lives such a scene of milery, that they themselves looked upon it as a commencement of heaven's vengence on their crimes; while all who knew them expected in horror, that they would make that vengeance still more fignally dreadful, by wreaking their hatred upon each other's lives; or their defpair upon their own.

All the advantages, thus dearly carned, were an affuence diffufting for want of power of enjoyment, except in an external pomp that only mocked the mifery, within, and made the meannels it was defigned to hide the more remarkable.

PHIA

82

CHAP. XIV.

CHRYSAL's mafter defigns to fet up a coach; but wants a material article toward making a proper figure with it. He confults with an HERALD; who gives him an elaborate differtation, not the most pleasing to him, on COATS OF ARMS, and the modern methods of making them, in which he unfolds many curious mysteries, and undertakes at last, on proper encouragement, to make him a gentleman. CHRYSAL changes his fervice. Converfation between his new master and an ANTIQUA-RIAN. Gurious arguments, by which he proves the genuineness and importance of certain relicks of antiquity. CHRYSAL changes his fervice.

IN this age of delicacy and refinement the first thing thought of in genteel life is a carriage, which is to indifferibly neceffary to procure respect, that no emimence in feience, no practice of virtue is held in efteem, where it is wanted. Sensible of this, my master refolved to befpeak one, the elegance and grandeur of which should prove his taste and magnificent spirit. One difficulty though perplexed him not a little in the defign. This was his want of a coat of arms to decorate the outlide of it, and display to the world his illustrious defcent.

After much fruitlels meditation on fo important a fubject, it occurred to him, that an herald mult be the proper perfor to confult with upon the beft means of remedying this defect. Accordingly, he enquired for the, most emissent in that way, and on the morning fixed fixed for his attendance, prepared to receive him in fuch a manner as he imagined could not fail to infpire him with refpect. He was lolling at breakfaft in an elhow-chair; dreffed in a morning-gown of green da, mafk, with a red cap on his head, the cambrick lining of which was edged with a rich lace, that turned up over it, and crimfon velvet flippers on his feet, one of which was extended on a cufhion of the fame materials, to give him the appearance of the gout, a diforder which he looked upon as an inconteftible proof of his heing forung from a good family, while his lady poured out his tea, and between every difh read a paragraph in a news-paper to entertain him.

83 ·

Digitized by GOOgle

As foon as the herald was fhewn in, my mafter caft an eye upon his lady, and nodding majeficially toward the door, fhe withdrew, and left him to his buines. After the ufual queficions about the weather, and the news, my mafter at length entered upon the fubject 'I understand' S--S-S- Sir, (faid he faultering, and almost blushing in fpite of his affurance) that you have great faill in heraldry; and therefore defired to fee you to confult about my c--c--c-cnat of arms.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>4</sup> I do prefume Sir, (anfwered the herald with an air of importance) to have fome knowledge in that myslerious and fublime feience, and hope I thall not wrong the character you have received of me, in any thing in which you are pleafed to employ me. Hem! ahem! Pray Sir, what may be the nature of your prefent commands? I fuppole you want to introduce into your own coat, the bearing of fome branch of your family, which is fallen to you. There is nothing in the world value to be done, that is by one, who, as I faid before, and statistic formed to form the field properly, properly, and taking care that the blazoning of the different quarterings, of which all good families gain many in a long courie of defeents, may not be wrongly blended, as colour upon colour, or metal upon metal, which you must know is falle heraldry; though I beg pardon, your blazoning is most likely in precious flones, the pecaliar emblems of nobility with us. But that makes no difference, as I will convince you, if you pleafe to let me fee your arms.'

28

'Sir, (replied my matter, fill more confounded by this jargon) that is not what I want. I would have an entire n-n-new coat.

"O! I underfand you, Sir! you are the first of your family; and want to make arms for yourfelf, as none of your ancestors have test you any! Why Sir, that too may be done; but it must be with judgment and case, as I faid before, for fear of interfering with the arms of any other family. But you may trust me for that, Sir! half the arms you fee cut such a figure about the town are of my devising. The king may make lords and knights of whom he pleases, but it is the heraft must make them gentlemen; for what is 'your mane it hout a coat of arms? Pray, Sir, what is 'your mane? And of what profession was your father?

'Wh-- wh--why do you aft, Sir?' I suppose these cannot be any thing material to your purpose in them?'

"Purden me, good Sir, they are material, very maturial. A name, efpesially if it conflits of many fyliables, often gives an excellent hint; Br mach as your modern with may affect to defpife the mafferious loanaing of Rebus's, wiler antiquity held it in high repute, as you mode have observed from the many illutivous Wor. IV. H coats ·85 +1:-

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

coats of arms taken entirely from the name : and thea knowledge of the profession of a gentleman's father is absolutely necessive for many reasons. There are profeffions the implements of which are never drop'd, because the professions themselves are ecckoned honourable; as there also are others, nothing relating to which is ever borne, for the contrary reason. The fan of a general, or an admiral, for inflance, will have his arms charged with implements of war; but the fon of a man who kept a chandler's thop, will never bear a lump of butter, or a bunch of candles; nor the fon of a taylor, a pair of feissar or a thimble; for these would at once betray what is defigned to be hid; and therefore it is absolutely necessary that I should be informed of these particulars.<sup>2</sup>----

'B-b--b--but Sir, can you not firike out fomething entirely new, without alluding to any name, or profeffion at all? I am willing to pay you well for your trouble, only let me have fomething elegant and grand.'

'I understand you, Sir. I'll engage to pleafe you. I'll quarter you the coat of a crown'd head in an inflant, without any body's being able to fay a word against it. Leave it to me, and I'll engage to please you; not the richest contractor or Nabob of them all fhall make such a figure.

'And pray, Si, what is your price, for a job of this kind ?'--' Price, Sis, I never make bargains ! let common mechanics do that ! Gentlemen always make me a prefent when they befpeak their honours; and ascording to the value of that, my invention is either high or low.'

VVell, Sir, it fhan't fink on that account now.

dby Google.

Here are ten guineas for you, as an earnest of what I will give, if I like your work, when it it done.'

Sir ! you may depend on having the higheit arms of any man in the kingdom. Your generofity thews: that you ought to be a gentleman; and it fhall be my fault if I don't make you one, in the fight of the world."----- Saying this, he took his leave, when I was heartily glad to go with him, being part of the price naid upon this occasion for the making of a gentleman.

As foon as my new mafter went home, he retired to his closet, and taking out the money he had just received, ' Hah ! hah ! no bad price for a little daubing! (faid he laughing, and chinking the purfe.) I wonder the fellow could be fuch an ais as to thick that my thing in my power to do could make him pais for agentleman ! But let him have his way ! his folly is my gain; and it is no more than justice, that one who has cheated the world fo long, fhould cheat himfelf at hil, and facrifice the earnings of villainy to vanity !! But hold ! this is about the time my Antiquarian was to come. Let me fee those ancient manufcripts, and inferiptions which I had done last week ! upon my life, they look very well. The cafker upon this copper, and the finoke upon this parchment, are as natural as they were the work of a thoufand years; and these fcrawls might pais even for the fpells of the witch of Endor, they have fo little likeness to any marks made to convey thought; at this time. He is a very pretty fillow that did them, and deferves encouragement."

Just as he faid this, the perfon he expected came, and entering without ceremony upon his bulinels, ' I call-ed upon you, Sir, (faid he) to fee thole things you men-H-2 tioned.

CHRYSAL: OB, THE

tioned to me. If they are really what you defender, we shall not differ about the price, high sait is."

"I hope, Sir, (answered my master) you have not to mean an opinion of my judgment, as to imagine I. could ever think of imposing upon you. No, Sir ! I know that to be impossible; even if I could be bale enough to attempt it; and therefore would not mention any thing to you, that could admit of the leaft doubt to a perfon of your profound learning. As to the price, I could have had much more lince I faw you ; but I thought it but juffice to their merit to offer them first to you, as there is no other collection in the kingdom worthy of them; and I am above rifing ina demand I have once made, though infinitely thert of their intrinfic salue, as you will be convinced the moment you fee them. Here, Sir, is the manufeript, which I had the good fortune to meet with as I was rummaging among fome old recerds in our office, that had never been flirred fince the reign of Henry the Eighth. The paper in which it was wrapped was fo. decayed, that it mouldered quite away to immediately upon its coming into the open air, that I had feares time to read the contents, which were, that this parchment had been found in the tomb of Thomas a Becker, upon breaking up of his farine at the Reformation, and was laid up there, on account of its antiquity. That it must have been very ancient, even before his time, the colour and decay of the parchment would fufficiently prose, were there not other proofs full more convincing to fuch as have judgment to comprehend them. The shape of the letter shews its age Tois manner of writing, as appears by comparing it with other ancient manufcripts, was introduced in the beginning beginning of the fecond century of the Chrislian. Ara, and quite dropped by the middle of the third. Within that period therefore it must have been written. Its antiquity being thus fixed, the purport of it is next to be confidered; and of that and its importance. there can be no just room to doubt. This faot at the bottom of the parchment, though fo much defaced bytime, bears a firong refemblance to the imprefion of a mitre, and thereby proves that fome bifhop was the author of what was written over it, into which thefe four letters, M-A-T--H, fortunately fo very plain, give the eleareft light; for as they must have been part of the word ARIMATHEA, they prove that the opinion of Jofeph of Arimathan's having first preached the Gofpel in Britain, was known to early as in the fecond century. and fo decide that long contelled point ; as, who can be fuch an Infidel as to doubt a thing given thus, as I may fay, under the facred feal of the mitre, and that. fo very near the time.'

88.

ADVENTURES of a GUINEA.

80

Very true ! but is it not as probable, that the defign of this writing was to refute that opinion, as to confirm it ??

' My good Sir, if you allow weight to fuch trivial objections as this, you give up all the knowledge of an Antiquarian, which never amounts higher than to posfible conjecture, without regard to probability even. against him; for conjectures, such as this, founded on effaced remains of antiquity, are of much greater weight in the learned world, because they shew more learning than the plainest conclusions drawn from evident and complete records, as these are obvious to any common perfor. But why do I mention these things ·t0

H a

¶σ́ to you, who underfind them to much better thin #

" 5 believe I do, Sir, know fomething of those matters; and was fatisfied both of its antiquity, and importance, at the first glance of my aye; though I farted that objection for more amakanent. But where in the fragment 3 I flould be glad to fee that alfo.<sup>2</sup>

" Here it is. Sir ; fanfwered my maker, taking a bit of broken copper out of a box, in which it was careful-W wrapped ap in cotton) this plate of copper was torn in the manner you fee, from the head of a fepulcinal monument on the top of mount Librarys, by a perion who had been fent thither, by a celebrated Somiety, on surpole to feek for fuch things; and at his return made me a prefent of it, as the most valuable acquisition he had made, out of gratitude for my having helped him to the job. Observe this canker, Sir I much as it has been rubbed off in the carriage; the depth and colour of it fhew, that it nfuft have been fome thousands of vears in gathering. What the occasion of fotting it up was, fome particular circumflances direct to a conjecture fufficiently probable. You fee this hole, which the canker has eaten almost through the copper, with this firoke turning up over it. This certainly is the remains of the figure of a lion, as is plain from these two. tufts in the middle, and stitke end of the froke, which mult have been the tail of it. Now as the lion was the emblem of Judah, it cannot be deplated but fome grist perfonage of that tribe must have been buried where this emblem was fet up ; a circumflance, that to clearly proves the antiquity of ceats of arms, that I do not know how to think of parting with it, it affords fuch

20

in illufination to a treatife I am at this time engaged in. writing, on that fublime and difficult fubject.'

• Not part with it! (replied the Antiquarian, returning it carefully into the box, and then gramming the box into his bolom) you mult get it first, my good friend, to part with it. Hah ! hah ! hah ! a very pretty jeft truly ! you offer a thing to fale, and let a price upon it, and then you cannot part with it ! a very pretty jeft truly ! Here is your money, both for the manufcript, and the frequent; and when you meet with any other fuch precious remains of antiquity, I shall be obliged to you to let me have the preterence, No body will give you a better price.<sup>2</sup>

Saying this, he reached my mafter a hask-mote, which he took with an air of diffatisfation; and while he was telling out change, 'You do as you pleafe with me, Sir, (faid he) this time; but the naxt, I thalf. be more upon my guard. I am glad however, that it, goes into fo noble a collection as yours, where it will have juffice done to its merit.'

<sup>6</sup> Aye, Sir ! (anfwered the Antiquarian, with a finile of felf-complacency.) I have been at fome pains and expence too, to make a collection; and have the fatisfacsion to think, that whenever I die, it will make as good a figure in a fale catalogue as that of moft of my cotemporaries. I fhall leave proofs behind me, that I have not fipent my life in vain. What would I not give to hear the character which an able Austioneer will give of me, upon opening the fale? I with my good friend Puff may out-live me, to have the job. There is no man fets forth the merit of any thing in fuch happy terms. He has words at will, as they fay. What an high opinion will be raife of my learning, talle.

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

taile, and judgment? But that's right. You faid you wanted this fragment, for a particular occation ! I am by no means averfe to obliging you. You are welcome to quote it, as in my collection, fuppole in this, or fome fuch manner, as appears (proving what you have advanced before) by a most valuable, and rare antique fragment, (or whatever, elfe you fhall call it) in the moli envious, or costly, or ineflimable, or noble, (or perhaps all thefe) collection of my late most learned, and judicious, and indefatigable, and munificent friend, or whatever other titles of the kind your judgment and regard fhall dictate to you."

<sup>4</sup> I am much obliged to you for the favour ; (returned my mafter, fcarce able to reftrain his laughter) and fhall be fare to avail myfelf of it, at the proper time, as able to do at in a manner, which, however flort it may fall of your merit, will yet teflify my high and refpectful fenfe of it.<sup>2</sup>—Saying this, he gave him the shange of his note, among which I was, and fent himaway happy.<sup>2</sup>

GHAP.

ed by Google

CHAP. XV.

A modef method of feeking fame. CHRYSAL's mafter confirms bimfelf in his refolution to gratify an uncommon curiofity, by a great example. The judicious and learned manner in which he claffed and entered his new acquifitions. Curious remark on the value of books. He goes to an auetion, where he makes an extraordinary purchafe. CHRYSAL changes his fervice, for that of the Auctioneer. Specimen and effects of his new mafter's elequence, learning, and judgment.

A MAN'S fpending his life and fortune, in buying up books of learning, and obfcure remains of antiquity, only to make a great fale after his death, was a method of feeking fame more modelt than I had hitherto met among mankind. As foon as my new mafter reached home, he went directly into his Mulzum, and taking sut his rare purchases, stared at them for some time in a kind of flupid delight, till no longer able to contain it, What an opinion (faid he) will the world have of me, when all these come to be shewn for fale? I hope my worthy friend Puff will live to do me juffice ! What if I should beg of him to give me a specimen of the manner in which he will fet them out ? He cannot rofule me that gratification, in return for all the money he has taken from me, especially as I have told him that I defign he shall have the job. Such a request is not improper. It has the fanction of one of the greatof names in antiquity to support it. Cicero, the great Gicero, defired his friend the historian to let him know what.

Digitized by Google

œ

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

94

what he intended to fay, of him; and need I hefitate to follow his example? Whatever has the authority of antiquity muft be right; and therefore. I will go to him directly about it.---But hold! I muft enter these articles in my catalogue first.'

Then taking down an huge folio richly bound, and inferibed CATALOGUE, on the back and fides, in capitals of gold, he fat down to infert this valuable addition to his treasure ; and opening the book with great deliberation, 'What are the heads (faid he) under which they are to be classed? Let me fee! Antiques ! no. That is for my coins, and buffs, and urns. What is the next? Ancient manufcripts, and fragments ! Aye ! thefe are they, Let me confider now what are the titles ! .... Then laying the fore finger of his right hand upon the tip of his nofe, fupporting his chin with his thumb, flutting his eyes, and leaning back in his chair, on the arm of which he refled his elbow. 'How unfucky it.' was' (refumed he, after a long paule) ' that he did not tell their names! I was afhamed to afk him directly, though I did as much, if he had minded me. But can't I make them out, from what he faid ? A very antique manuscript .... no. That will not do. Antique is for works of art ; ancient is the word here --- A very ancient manufcript written by Thomas a Becket in the fecond century, and found in his tomb at the Reftoration, proving that Joseph of Arimathea was an English bishop .--- Yes. That is it. And then for the fregment. ----- very ancient ----- no, antique. Antique is the word for fragments, they are made by art ; a very antique fragment torn from a monument on mount Libanus, proving that forme great perfon was buried there; and that a lion, was the arms of Indah .- Aye; their, ملاني will do! I knew I could make them out. This is just the fubliance of what he faid, but in fewer and better words. Titles fhould be fhort and pithy. Multum in parvo. Much in a little compets. Let me alone for hitting off a firiking title. I have not been an Antiquarian fo long for pothing.'---Then comming them over twice or thrice to try how they founded, he entered them in his catalogue, and putting the book back into its place, fat down to contemplate his own confequence in the learned world.

Digitized by Google .

95

But fublime as this onjoyment was, his indefatigable industry would not permit him to indulge it long. 'Hah !' (faid he, farting, as upon fudden recollection) " that's right ! the fale of those Chinese characters, brought over in the last fleets, comes on about this very time. It was quite out of my head; and I would not have miffed of them on any account. They'll make a capital article : for the Chinele tafte is coming into fuch great vogue, that I suppose we shall foon learn their language, though I should be forry to fee that too, as it would leffen the value of my Chinele books; for books are valued now the more for not being underflood, as I know by experience, having laid out many a pound in the purchase of fuch as I understand no more of, than if they were Chinefe. But let those who know no other use of books but to read them, buy only fuch as they can read : I collect mine for another purpole, and a noble collection I will have, let it cost me what it will; I care not whether I die worth a groat builde. The fame of that is fortune enough for me."

Parshant to this noble refolution he went directly to the fale, where he was for charmed with the Auctioneer's learning and eloquence, that he out-bade every every body, and carried off in triamph the curious, she rare, the inclimable key, into all themplerious, the profound, the fublime wildom of that prince of all Phitofophere, Legiflators, and Hierarchs, the divine Gow -rur-sme, and all his learned, and judicious Bifciples and Commentators, THE CHINESE CHARACTERS, in paying for which, I changed his fervice for that of the Auctioneer.

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

My new maker proceeded for the remainder of the fale, to difplay his abilities in the fame extraordinary manner; giving circumfantial accounts of things he knew nothing of; and belowing the most extraordinary praifes for excellencies of his, own invention, often inconfident with each other, and with the fubject to which they were ignorantly attributed, with a confidence that bore down doubt, and gained implicit credit with the gaping crowd, in definnce to reason, and their very fenfes, till he led them on by little and little, to pay the price of fuch an imaginary value. But this will be best explained by an inflance that happened just after I came into his peffection.

The fale of that day confided nominally of the collection of a Cheefemonger lately descaled, who had been an eminent Antiquarian, and Virtuolo. I fay mminally; because, though the whole weat under his name, fearce the tenth part of it had over been his, the reft being made up from every quarter by my mafter. Among the rare, curions, and coffly articles exhibited on this occasion, was a veffel of Poreclaint, of an uncommon thape, consented with feveral odd and uncouth representations of animals; and forme figures inst unlike the characters of a language.

"Gentlesten," (faid my mafter, a lism as this was produced) 'You here fee one of the rareft, and molt valuable remains of antiquity, ever brought into Europe. This here fuperb vafe was the identical cup, out of which the fublime emperors of China for numberlefs ages drank the confectated wine, on the day of their coronation. It was found, gentlemen, among the treasures of the Great Mogul by Thomas Couli Can, when he dethroned that there prince, out of the wreck of whole fpoils, when they were loft in paffing the river of the Indies, it was faved by a Chinese Nabob, from whom it was afterwards taken, together with his crown. by that there heaven-born general, who made those effeminate, and daftardly Indians tremble at the name of an Englishman; and given by him as a precious token of his effeem, to the deceased, his very learned and cu. rious friend. This, gentlemen, is in few words the whole full and true account of this here ineftimable curiofity, every word of which can be proved by unqueflionable authority. As for the vafe itfelf, exclusive of all this, its own merits give it fufficient value. Obferve these here figures, gentlemen ; they are Egyptian hieroglyphics, denoting the duties of a fovereign, which those wife Mandarines always take care to infiruct their emperors in. This here lion, for inflance, fignifies, that he must be courageous and valiant ; this fox, that he must be wife : and fo on. But the most extraordinary thing of all, gentlemen, is these here characters. They are a talifman, or charm, invented by Mahomet to protect the owner of this cup from the influence of evil spirits. I do not presume, gentlemen, to fland up for the virtue of fuch things. The notion of fpirits, I am fenfible, is much exploded; and the religion of Mahomet cried down among us; but ftill, Vot. IV. I gen-

97

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OB, THE .

98

gentlemen, without entering into thele here nice points, we all know that he was a great man, and lived a great while ago, which is fufficient to make any thing that was his, of great value to men of learning, who are an bove prejudice in these matters. But belide all this, these here characters are of the greatest importance, on another account ; as they prove beyond dispute, that the true method of writing the learned languages was without accents, not one appearing, as you fee, gentlemen, in this most original and authentic relick of an. tient learning, and fo put an end to that there controverfy, that has fo long puzzled the world. It were prefumption in me, gentlemen, to attempt putting a value on a thing that is invaluable. I will therefore fet it up at what you please, as you are the best judges. This only I will make bold to fay, that the best judge of all will have it, as he will give molt for it; for too much it is impoffible to give."

So just an account, and such judicious praise, could not fail of effect. The Virtusti round him, fatisfied that what he faid must be true, becaule spoken with confidence, and above their comprehension, vied with each other for the possession of so ineffimable a treasfure, till they raised it to an height, at which they themfelves were surprised, as soon as the spirit of bidding. Suman to cool, and they had time to reflect.

CHA

CHAP. XVI.

An unfavory accident flops bim flort in his barangue. He turns off the jeft, with another, and accounts learnedly for what has bappened. The real caufe and confequence of that accident. Reflections on auctioncering, and the caufes of its fuacefs.

THIS was the time, for which he always referved the highest flights of his eloquence, to raile that fpirit again. Refuming therefore his harangue, ' You paule, gentlemen, (faid he) only to confider how much farther you may rife with fafety; for it is impossible that perfons of your profound tafte and judgment should difgrace them fo much, as to let fuch a jewel go for fo mere a trifle. Do not take my word, gentlemen, for its value. I may be millaken, but you cannot. Examine it therefore yourfelves. Observe the beauty of these here unknown figures ! read these unintelligible characters; and fmell the aromatick odour which the vale still retains, and ever will retain, from the quinteffences of all the fpices of the Indies, which used to be mixed with the confe crated wine. The perfume is almolt enough to revive the dead.'

Saying this, he went to finell it himself to lead the way to the reft, and putting the mouth of it to his note, without taking off the cover, that the fragrance should not evaporate, as he railed his hand, a fiream, that smitted a favour far from aromatick, gushed out into his face, and filled his mouth, as well as note, with fonething more fubfuntial than perfume.

I 2

It

It is impoffible to deferibe his fituation, at fuch a difgraceful accident. Surprize, fhame, and loathing aggravated each other, and threw him into fuch confufion, as once in his life deprived him of utterance for fome moments. As foon as he had emptied his mouth, and wiped his face, 'Villain,' (fputtered he to his fervant) 'how has this happened? Whom have you let play me this bafe, malicious, low-liv'd trick?'

• S---Sir,' (anfwered the fellow, as well as his ilruggle to fupprefs his laughter permitted him to fpeak) • I know nothing of the matter. I never left any one a moment alone among the things, but them there ladies, who I told you fent me out for a glafs of Ratifia, t'other morning, and how could I have fufpected their doing fuch a thing?

'Ratifa!' (replied my malter, who had by this time recovered his affurance, and knew the beft way to turn off one jeft is by another)' Gin, you (hould fay; for if I can judge by tafle, and fmell, that is their liquor. I fuppole they did it on purpole to revenge their fex upon Mahomet, for taking away their fouls. (I with he had alfo taken away the filthines of their difpoltions!) by defiling fo celebrated a monument of his learning and skill, in this nafty manner, Hah! hah!

The oddity of fuch a thought naturally made the company join in liis laugh; but could not fo far wipe off the difgrace which the defiled vafe had fuffered, as to make any more be offered for it, fo that it was forced to be knocked down to the laft bidder, at not much more than if it had been made of gold, at which the purchater and my mafter were equally mortified, tho' for different and with very unequal reafons.

Dipitized by Google

Ăз

ICO

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA ... FOR

As for the casile of this misfortune; it was really what the fervant faid. One of the ladies, who came to view the curiolities, having certain prefling occasions, feigned a pretence to fend him out; and in the mean time made such use of this vale, being the first conveniency that came to her hand, as overpowered the scent of some spices, which had been put into it for the purpole.

It was fortunate for my mafter, that this was the laft article in the fale of that day, as a fpirit of ridicule could not be favourable to his bufinels. As foon as the company was gone, he fettled his accounts, and fumming up the profits, 'Why this is pretty well !' (faid he, rubbing his hands and fhrugging up his fhoulders) 'this does pretty well! Though if that damned accident had not happened, (turning up his nofe, and fpitting with loathing) it would have been much better, The fools were in the humour, and wanted only to be kept up. However, I have not much right to complain upon the whole. That there lordan colt me five fhillings, and I have fold it for fifty pounds. Much good inay the judicious buyer make of his bargain-This is the happinels of a man's having his tongue well hung. A mealy mouth will never do in my butinels ; which after all is the belt going. I might have flood freezing behind a counter this month, and not made half this much. In the way of fair trade, as it is called, people have their fendes about them, and fland to examine before they buy, but any trumpery will go off in this way.'

I have observed your algonishment at the estimets with which my master succeeded in such gross impolition; but the reason of it is obvious. All mankind I 3 have have an ambition of diftinguifhing themfelves one way or another; and generally chufe that in which they have the leaft qualifications to entitle them to fuccefs, in order to hide their own deficiency. The coward, for inftance, affects valour; the block-head knowledge; and the illiterate tradefinan, who has made a fortune by plodding, or in fome illiberal bufinefs, tafte and judgment in the abfrufeit purfuits of learned curiofity, in which, as there is no fixed rule to judge by, caprice takes the direction, and opens an ample field for impolition.

. . . . .

Digitized by Google

As to the bufinels of auctioneering in general, it owes the greatest part of that fuccess with which my malter was fo pleafed, to another caufe. The defire of buying bargains, which governs every one who buys any thing, makes people crowd to those places where things are to be fold, not as in the regular course of trade, for what they appear to be worth, but for the most that can be got for them ; and there emulation, dependence on each other's judgment, (those people know what they are doing, and would not bid fo much, if it was not worth more) and the oratory of the auctioneer, lead them by infenfible advances, as their fpirits rife, to give prices which they never meant to give, when they began to bid. That great bargains are often got at fuch places is true, but that is chiefly in a particular branch of the bulinefs, the mystery of which will be explained to you.

СНАР.

IOZ

CHAP. XVII.

CHRYSAL'S mafter is visited by a CONNOISSEUR, to whom be gives a short receipt how to make his pictures sell, and makes some striking remarks on the disregard people shew for their families, which fends his visitor away in a buff.

MY mafter was interrupted in his pleafing meditations, by the entrance of a gentleman, the fight of whom promifed him the greateft pleafure of carrying the fubject of them into execution. After fome judicious remarks on the tafte of the town, and the prefent flate of virtue, in the courfe of which each liberally complimented the other, ' Pray, Sir, (faid the gentleman) how do pictures fell this feafon ?'

'Never better, Sir (answered my master) pictures are every body's money now. A good master brings any thing; and what is more, I am convinced they will rife fill higher, fo that buyers have no time to lole. I have a fale next week, when you will fee fuch prices as will aftonish you. There are fome things there that I know you will have, let them cost what they will, they fuit your fine collection fo exactly.

'Why, as to that,' (replied the gentleman) 'my mind is a good deal changed. I have often taken it into my head lately to part with my pictures, and have therefore called upon you to defire that you will come in the morning, and let me know what you think they are worth.'

Worth, Sir! they are worth a great deal of money; which there is not the leaft danger but they will bring. bring, if they are managed properly. There is more, Sir, in the management of a fale, much more than molt people dream of, I affure you."---

I am fenfible of that, Sir; and also of your abilities in fuch management, which you will have the belt encouragement to exert on this occasion, as I propose felling the whole to you together, if we can agree."---

This turn came fo unexpected, that it ftruck my malter quite down of the mouth, as he was fentible that he had overflot himfelf, and fpoiled his market by faving to much : ' It is very unlucky, Sir : (answered he, changing his note directly) ' that I did not know your intention fooner. I could then have divided them properly among the feveral fales of the featon; but it is now quite too late; this here one next week is the laft: and the catalogues for that are all made out, and difperfed, to that there is no poffibility of flipping in a fingle article. Belides, the buyers have laid out all their money."----

Slipping in, Sir! I don't understand you. Do not you think my pictures are fufficent both in number and value to make a fale by themfelves? I am fure I have more than I have once known you make noise enough about, collections in no refpect equal to mine. There must be some mystery in this, which I cannot comprebend.'

Very true, Sir! there are mysteries, as you obferve, in all bufineffes ; and perhaps in none more than our's."

"I am not enquiring into your mylteries. All I defire to know is, why after just telling me that pictures never bore fo high a price as at this time, and that mine mine could not fail of bringing a great deal of money, you fhould fo foon change your opinion.'

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 105

'Pardon me, Sir! I have not changed my opinion in the leaft; and shall be very proud to ferve you to the best of my abilities, in the way of a sale; but there is a material reason, why I must beg to be excused in buying them, to stand the hazard of it myself.'-----

'I flould be glad to know what that reason can be, for I must own I cannot conceive it.'

'Why, Sir, it is a thing to be fure that may feens odd to you; but experience has taught us the truth of it. In fhort, Sir, it is your being alive.'

'How! my being alive! What difference can my life or death make in the value of my pictures ?'

"A very great one, Sir, I affure you in all the course of my bufiness, I never knew oue inflance of a fale's going off well, where the owner was living. People conclude that a perfon parts with pictures either through diffike or neeeffity. The former, you know, depreciates them at once; nor does the other much les; as people of fashion delpife a man, and every thing belonging to him, the moment it is known that he is in diffress. Bufides, an Auctioneer's tongue is tied up from faying any thing of a perfon's tafte, and judgment, and all that, while he is living, it founds fo fulfome; and you are fensible that a good character of the collector often goes a great way in helping off a collection."

'The best thing then for a man to do on fuch an occasion, I prefume, would be to shoot himself through the head. Hah!'

'Hah! Hah! Hah! You are pleafed to jest, Sir; but to be fure it would be of great advantage. Curiofity fity brings all the world upon those occasions, and then a man has an opportunity of faying fo many things as ' that the deceased would not take ten times fo. much, if he were living;' or, ' that the high price he mave for it caused the diffress that made him kill himfelf; or a thousand other firiking things of the kind. I never have to much pleafure as upon those occasions, they give a man fo much room to fhew himfelf. Indeed, if gentlemen confidered the thing in time, more of them would take this method of delivering themfel es and their families both from diffrefs, and not defer it till all is gone, and the furvivors can make nothing by their death ; but few people take any care for their families now-o'days. It is a bold pufh to be fure ; tho' not fo bad as a man's fhooting himfelf to win a wager neither. I thould beg your pardon, Sir, for speaking fo freely ; but as I know it is not your cafe, you cannot take offence; though even if I thought it was, I would not prelume to recommend fuch a think for the world. Every body is to judge for himfelf. I only give you my opinion what effect it would have."

'I underflaud you very well, Sir;' (anf.vered the gentleman, who had much difficulty to hear him out) ' and in return for your opinion, will give you my advice, which is to confider better whom you fpeak to in this infolent manner another time, for fear of receiving fusch chaftifement, as contempt alone prevents my giving you this moment.'----On faying which words he turned about and left the mom.

CHAR.

Digitizet by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

CHAP. XVIII.

CHRYALL'S mafter receives an agreeable fummons. His encomiums on the generofity of merchants, an account of the way many of them acquire reputation for tafte and judgment. He meets the merchant, who confults him on a different branch of his bufinefs, from that which be expected. CHRY-SAL'S mafter, in order to encourage his cuffomer, gives a large account of his own abilities. and opens fome curious fecrets in his bufinefs. A bargain is fruck, to the mutual fatisfaction of both parties: and CHBYSAL abanges his fervice for that of the merchant.

WELL as my mafter was acoultomed to rebukes, there was fomething in the nature of this which difconcerted him to much that he had not power to make the gentleman any reply. But he was foon relieved from the trepidation into which it threw him, by a mellage from an eminent merchant to meet him directly at a neighbouring tavern. ' Aye,' (faid he, adjusting his wig at the glass, and putting on his cloak) this is the thing ! There is fome difference between treating with a good substantial oitizen who will mind what a man favs, and your people of fathion, who fly into a rage forfooth, if they can't have their own way in every thing. No people part with their money for freely as merchants. They don't fand higgling, and criticizing like the others. All they require is to be afked a good price, and then they think a thing muft he good of course. Many a time have I got five times more more from a merchant, than I dared to have asked from a duke. I fuppole he wants to fhew his talle next week at the fale; and has fent for me to tell him which are the beft pieces, and how much he may bid for them. He is not the first citizen whom my influctions have made pals for a man of taste and judgment. I love such pupils, they pay so well for their learning; and that more ways than one; for they buy what no body elfe would bid for; it is only flipping a puffer or two of quality at them, enough of whom come fharking at every fale for that purpole only, and they may be raifed to any price. No people part with their money like merchants.'

Digitized by Google

When he came to the tavern he found the merchant waiting for him. After the compliments common upon fuch occasions were politely interchanged, ' I defired to fee you (faid the merchant, proceeding to bufinefs, though not without evident confusion) on an affair that will convince you of my confidence in your abilities and honour. Trade, as you know, has been fo dead fome time past, that there is no getting in a penny of money, without tearing people to pieces. Now, as I had rather fuffer fomething myfelf, than opprefs any honeft man, till he can bring his affairs about, fhould be glad to difpose of fome parcel of goods, even under their value,, to raile money for present occafions, that is, provided it can be done in fuch a manner as not to be known as fuch a thing might injure a man's credit.'

<sup>4</sup> Dear Sir, (aufwered my mafter, whole heart leaped with joy at the mention of fuch an affair) never fear that; 1<sup>2</sup>Il engage to manage it fo, that if every one who knows you, were to watch, they'd never even fufpect

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

IC9

fpect the leaft of the matter. There is nothing eafier. nor more common in the way of bufinefs; and it luckily happens, that I have the fineft opportunity at this very time, that ever I had in my life. I have a large fale under a commiffion, the very week after next, into which I can hedge a thousand or two, with the greatest eafe and fafety. Affigners never take no. tice of fuch things. We understand one another bettet than that. Many a worthy man have I enabled to hold his head above water, for years, by this method. To be fure, it must have an end fome time; but then a man stands in fortune's way for a lucky bit, you know : and not only that, but also makes fure of io much good living in the mean time, and can be no worfe at the laft; and then, when all comes to all, and there muft be a blow-up, it gives him an opportunity of fecuring fomething against a rainy day, as the faying is. As for its being discovered, there are ways enough to prevent that. It is but entering them as fold, and I'll find a buyer, that shall never be heard more of. Lord. Sir, if it was not for things of this kind, our bufinefs would be nothing to what it is. Half the fales you fee every day in the papers, are made up in this manner."

"Well, Sir, (replied the merchant, who had liftened to him with attention, and feemed greatly affected at fome part of what he faid) I prefume you underfland your bufinefs; and as I have no doubt of your henour, I fhall leave the whole entirely to your management. Here is an account of the particulars, which I want to difpose of at this time. They are in a private wave hours, whither I have had them conveyed to be ready for the purpose, of which this is the key; and here is a Vot. IV. K bill

Digitized by GOOgle

rio

bill of fale, which I will execute directly, as I have an occafion for two thousand pounds this very evening. You fee there is value more than fufficient for double that fum, as you will be a better judge when you fee the goods, but the refl can fland forward till they are difposed of; and the account made up.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>c</sup> Really, Sir, I fhould be extremely glad to ferve you; but I fear, I have not lo much cafh by me-However, if you pleafe, I'll go with you, and look at the goods; and then I'll flep home, and try what I can do.'

Accordingly away they went together to the warehouse, where my master, being fatisfied with the value of the goods, left the merchant, and 'hied him home directly with a joyful heart for the money.

'So! (faid he to himfelf, as he went along) I thought what things would come to in the end! His coach, and country house! his wife's routs ! and his own kept millrefs have made quick work with him. I believe fuch men mult imagine the reft of the world to be blind, or they would never go on at fuch a rate, I suppose he's preparing for a place in the Gazette tomorrow, or next day. But that is no affair of mine. I'll take care to make a fafe bargain for myfelf; and let him look to the reft. I am not to fwear for him. Of all the buliness in our way, I like this the best. A man can make up what account he pleafes, without danger of its being diffuted with him. All here is fnug and fecure. If I could get but jobs enough of this kind. I'd let who would chaffer for toys, and daubings with people of quality, who often outflarp us, in fpite of all our experience."

By this time he reached home, where he foon made up

up the money, with the help of that and the former day's fale, without hefitating a moment at its not being his own, and taking with him proper perfons to attelf his bargain, and new locks to make fure of it. returned to the merchant, with whom he foon concluded every thing without foruple or delay on either fide; and then paying him on the fpot, in bank notes and cash, (among the latter of which I was) fent him away, as well fatisfied, as he himfell flaid behind.

CHAP. XIX.

Motive of CHRYSAL's new mafter for making fuch a bargain, with the many and great advantages a merchant may make of being in the bouse. A fort sketch of an election. The curious method which CHRYSAL's mafter took to evade the laws against bribery. He takes offence at the unreasonable presumption of bis constituents, and resolves to make the most of the bargain he has bought from them, which by a fingular piece of management be proposes to make cheaper than they think. CHEYSAL changes bis fervice, for that of the idol of an inn. The confequences of electioneering. Some account of CHRYSAL's new mistress. He quits ber service, for a curious purpose. An expedient to prevent the fale of poison for mind and body. CHRYSAL again changes bis fervice.

WHEN a man has fixed his mind upon gaining a particular end, he flights any inconveniencies which may attend the means. Though my new mafter was ionfishe of the loss he must fuffer by his bargain, the profpect profpect of accomplifting the purpole for which he made it, prevented its giving him any concern.

K 2

' As foon as he got home, he gave orders to have his equipage made ready for a journey into the country early next morning, and then retiring into his closet for a few moments before he went to bed, ' At length (faid he with a look of felf-congratulation) I fhall compais, what I have fo long fet my heart upon. What an advantage is it to a merchant to be in the house? I can laugh at bailiffs and bankruptcies, for five years at least: and in the mean time I shall have a thoufand opportunities of making my fortune by pushing boldly in the alley, now that all fears of the immediate consequences are over, or getting beneficial contracts with the government, or at least fome genteel and profitable employment under it. A merchant may make many advantages of being in the house! Confound that prating fellow ! I was once afraid that he finoaked my delign, he came fo near fome unlucky circumstances ; but it was above his cut. All his fchemes are common and low-lived. This of mine is a mafterstroke. It is playing deep, to be fure! Fiftecen hundred for my feat ; and what with other expences, and the lofs upon this night's work, as much more. It is playing damn'd deep. But it is too late to think of that now. I have fported many thousands upon a worfe chance in my time. At any rate I can laugh at bailiffs and bankruptcies, for five years at least; what an advantage it is to a merchant to be in the houfe.

Saying this he went to bed, where the advantages of being in the houfe fill ran fo ftrongly in his head, that he dreamed of nothing all night, but bullying creditors tors, and cringing to ministers ; doing jobs, and getting, contracts, places and penfions.

112

Digitized by GOOgle

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 113

In purfuance of his fcheme, he fet out next morning with a fplendid retinue for the borough he had in view, where he managed matters with fuch jndgment and generofity, keeping the whole town drunk from the moment he arrived, according to the policy which permits a candidate to deprive his electors of their fenfes, in order to enable them to judge better of his legiflative abilities, that he was elected in preference to a gentleman, the munificence of whole family had for many generations been the chief fupport of the place, and who himfelf fpent his ample fortune in hofpitality, and beneficence in it, but difdained to buy the votes of a wenal erew on this occasion.

As fuch a competitor naturally had every man of worth and honour in his intereft, it had been needfary for my mafter to proceed with the utmoft care and cireumfpection. Accordingly, instead of directly giving his voters money, he lent them the prices flipulated, on the focurity of their notes of hand, payable in a certain time; an expedient, in which he had a further view, then harely evading the laws against fuch practices.

Every thing being concluded, he was preparing to depart in triumph, when his conflituents waited upon him in form, with certain influctions for executing the trult they had thus reposed in him. Though he looked upon this as fuch a bare-faced piece of infolence, that he fearce knew how to bear it, yet as he had not yet taken his feat, he received their commands with the politest humility, and promifed the most faithful ubcdience to them. But they were no fooner out of his fight, than he changed his note. 'Impudent un-K 3 reafonable reafonable fcoundrels ! (faid he to himfelf, giving vent to his indignation, as he walked back and forward in the room) to talk of having reposed your trust in me, and pretend to give me instructions ! I have bought you, and I will fell you to the best bidder, if he were the devil; and a bad bargain he will have of you if he buys you as dear as I have. Though I have a stroke in my head to bring myself home, that you little think of. Those notes of hand, which you thought I took only to evalle the law, shall be paid to the last farthing, if I am not chosen for nothing next election. You shall find you have no fool to deal with.

· Digitized by Google

Just as he faid this, he received notice that his coach was ready, and the landlord's daughter coming to with him a good journey, he faluted her politely, and flipping a couple of guineas (one of which I was) into her hand to buy a ribbon, left the house like a man of honour.

I have not entered particularly into the circumflances of electioneering. They are too großs to give pleafure; and too well known to require repetition even to you. The effects I mean immediately in the place, were fuch as reafon may fuggeft to you. The electors, inflead of making any advantage of the price, for which they had thus literally fold their conficiences, liberties and properties, continued to wallow in drunkennefs, till every penny of it was fpent, after which it was fo long before they could fettle rightly to work again, that it required a year's hard labour and flarving to repair what they fuffered by this bout of excess and idlenefs.

My new miftrefs was what is not unjuftly called the idol of an inn. Endowed by nature with pretinefs enough enough to entitle her to flattery, and fufficient pertnefs to make her a coquet, on her return from a boardingfickool, where her natural talents were fo well improved by education, that fhe was thought fit to try her fortune in the world, fhe took her place in the bar, and flirted away with every gentleman that came to the house, in hopes of taking in fome one of the number for marriage, as others in her way had done.

ADV ENTURES OF A GUINEA. 115

The first passion of the female heart is for finery, to the gratification of which girls feldom fail to apply all the money in their power. But though my miltrels was very far from being infensible to this passion, another fcarce lefs powerful with the fex, took place of it at this time, which was curiofity.

A young officer, who had lately been quartered in the houfe, and made warm addreffes to her, had faid fo many fine things in praife of a certain book, called, Memoirs of a Lady of Pleafure, that fhe refolved to fee it, and for that purpofe applied to a circulating library in the town, the keeper of which told her, it was fo fcarce and valuable a book that he could not poffibly procure it for her under a guinea.

High as this price was, the would have found means to raife it, fo firong was her curiofity, had not the hurry of the election, which just then came on, taken up all her time. But every obstacle was now removed, and the very evening I came into her possible filling, the muffled herfelf up in one of the maid's cloaks, and went for it as foon as it was dark, when I was the purchase of her extraordinary bargain.

I fee you are flocked at the diffonefly and wickednefs of my new mafter for hiring out at fuch a price, or indeed at any price at all a book, whole obvious defign (and

(and which is too well calculated to accomplish) is to fupplant every principle of virtue in the yonthful mind. But the blame refis not folely upon him. The excuse, which the poet puts into the mouth of the apothecary for felling poifon, that ' his poverty, but not his will confented,' may with equal juffice be alledged in palliation of a poor bookfeller's vending impious or immoral books, the poifon of the mind.

For this reason, as no penalty, however fevere, may be fufficient to combat that necessity, the mast effectual way to prevent the vending of either poilon would be abfolutely to prohibit all those, whose poverty might fubject them to fuch temptation, from trading in books or drugs of any kind; as it is mest certain, that if these were acither poor apothecaries nor poor bookfellers, the fale of both vicious books and nozious drugs, would be much lefs extensive than it is, if it could not be totally fupprefied; their being very few of the human fpecies fo entirely given up to a reprobate fense, as to murder either the foul or body of a fellow creature, merely for the pleafure of doing it.

It may be judged that I did not remain long in the fervice of this maîter. The next morning after I came into his peffeffion, he came to London, where he laid out all the money he had in the purchase of a parcel of fuch books, as he thought most likely to fuit the taste of his customers, without regard either to virtue, or religion, on which occasion I changed his fervice for that of his bookfeller.

снар.

CHAP. XX.

Account of CHRYSAL'S new mafter. His beroick Spirit and resolution to push for a pension or pillory. Meeting between bim and a poet, who turns the tables upon bim. A curious method of forming a judgment of a work of genius. CHRYSAL's master is beaten out of all bis art, and for once buys a book by quality not quantity. The value of an author's name. CHRYSAL' changes bis fervice.

My new mafter was one of those afpiring genius's, whom desperate circumstances drive to push at every thing, and court confequences, the bare apprehension of which terrifies men, who have some character and fortune to lose, out of their senses. He was that evening to meet at a tavern, an author, the boldness and beauty of whose writings had for some time engaged the public attention in a particular manner, and made his numerous admirers tremble for his fastety.

As he happened to out-flay his time, my mafter's importance took offence at a freedom, which he thought fo much out of charafter. 'This is very pretty truly! (faid he, walking back and forward in a chafe) that I fhould wait an hour for an author. It was his bufinefs to have been here firft, and waited for me; but he is fo puffed up of late, that he has quite forgot himfelf. Bookfellers feldom meet with tuch infolence from authors. I fhould ferve him right to go away and difappoint him. But would not that difappoint myfelf more? He is come into fuch vogue lately, that that the beft man in the trade would be glad to get him. Well! if he does not do what I want, I know not who can! Fools may be frighted at the thoughts of a cart's tail, or a pillory, I know better things. Where they come in a popular caule, nothing fets a man's name up to fuch advantage; and that is the first flep towards making a fortune; as for the danger, it is only a mere bug-bear, while the meb is on my fide And therefore I'll go on without fear, if I am not hought off. A penfion or a pillory is the word.<sup>2</sup>

Digitized by Google

These heroic meditations were interrupted by the entrance of the author, who throwing himself carelessly into a chair, 'I believe I have made you wait (faid he) but I could not help it. I was obliged to flay to kick a puppy of a printer, who had been impertment; as I am to meet company directly, fo let me hear what you have to fay.'

'I thought, Sir, (answered my master, with an air of offended importance) you had appointed me to meet you here on business; and business you know cannot be hurried over so soon.'----

<sup>6</sup> Don't mention buliness to me! I hate the very name of it; as to any that can possibly be between you and me, it may be done in five minutes, as well as five years, so fipeak directly, and without farther preamble, for all your finefies could have no effect upon me, even if I would fubmit to let you try them.<sup>3</sup>----

<sup>4</sup> Fineffes, Sir! I don't know what you mean! I defy the world to charge me with having ever been guilty of any. The bufinefs I defired to meet you upon, was about a poem, I was informed you had ready for the prefs, and which I should be glad to treat with you for.<sup>3</sup>-----

· Well,

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 119

'Well, Sir! and what will you give me for it? Be quick; for I cannot wait to make many words.'.....

"What ! before I have feen it ! It is impossible for the to fay, till I have looked it over, and can judge what it is, and how much it will make."

The first thing my master did, when left thus to form his judgment of a work of genius, was to number the pages, and then the lines in a page or two; by the time he had done which the author returned, and taking the papers out of his hand, ' Well, Sir, (faid he) and what is the retult of your judgment ?----

Why really, Sir, (answered my mafter, after fome pause) I hardly know what to fay. I have caft off the copy, and do not think it will make more than a fhilling, however pomposity printed.<sup>2</sup>----

What you think it will make is not the matter; but what will you give me for it? I fell my works by the quality, not the quantity.---

* I do not doubt the quality of them in the leaft; but confidering how much the trade is over-flocked at prefent, and what a mere drug poetry has long been, I am a good deal at a lofs what to offer, as I fhould be unwilhing to give you or any gentleman offence by feeming to undervalue your works. What do you think of five guineas? I do not imagine that more can be given for is little; nor indeed thould I be fond of giving even that.

that, but in compliment to you: I have had twice as much for two, many a time.'

<sup>4</sup> Much good may your bargain do you, Six; but I will not take lefs than fifty for mine in compliment to you, or any bookfeller alive; and fo, Sir, I defire to know without more words (for I told you before that your eloquence would be thrown away upon me!) whe<sup>9</sup> ther you will give that; as I am in halte to go to company, much more agreeable to me than your's.<sup>9</sup>

What, Sir! fifty guineas, for fcarce five hundred lines! fuch a thing was never heard of in the trade.'-+

'Confound your trade, and you together ! Here waiter, what's to pay ?'--

'But, dear Sir! why will you be in fach an hurry? Can you not give yourfelf and me time to confider a little? Perhaps we might come nearer to each other !'----

'I have told you before, and I repeat it you again, that I will have fo much; and that without more words.'-----

'You are very peremptory, Sir; but you know your own value; and therefore, in hopes you will let me have more for my money next time, I will venture to give you your price now; though really, if it was not for your name, I could not poffibly do it; but to be fure that is worth a shilling extraordinary I own.'

"Which is twelve pence more than your's ever will be, unlefs to the Ordinary of Newgate. But come, give me the money! I want to go to my company."----

"Well, Sirl this is an hafty bargain; but I take it upon your word; and don't doubt but there is merit

2

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA,

121

CHAP.

in it, to answer such a price. Satire, Sir! keen fatire ; and fo plain, that he who runs may read, as the faying is, is the thing now-o'days. Where there is any doubt or difficulty in the application, it takes off the pleafure. from the generality of readers, who will fearce be fatisfied with lefs than the very name. That, Sir, is your great merit. Satire mult be perfonal, or it will never do.'----

'Perfonal! that mine never shall be. Vices, not Perfons, are the objects of my fatire; though where I find the former, I never fpare the latter, be the rank and character of life what it will.'

My mafter had by this time counted out the money, (among which I was) which the author took without telling over, and then went to his company, leaving the bookfeller fearcely more pleafed with his bargain, than mortified at the cavalier treatment he had met in making it.

VOL. IV.

CHAP. XXI.

Some account of the company to which CHRYSAL'S new mafter went. His behaviour to a young female, who accofted him in his way home. He takes her to a taveru for an uncommon purpofe, where he treats her uncommonly, and goes home with her from as uncommon a motive. Account of what he faw in her babitation, with the manner in which he behaved there. He takes another lodging for the whole family, where he leaves them abruptly, to fave himfelf and them trouble.

THE company, to which my new mafter was in finch hafte to go, confifted of a few perfons, whom a fimilarity of temper had linked in the clofeft intimacy. With thefe he fpent the remainder of the evening, in a manner which few would diffike, though fewer ftill could approve it; the fpirited wit and livelines of their conversation gilded the groffeft debaucheries; at the fame time, that the rectitude and fublimity of their sentiments, whenever their hearts could find opportunity to fpeak, made the vices of their practice ftill more horrible by the contraft.

. They broke not up, as it might be imagined, till nature funk under their excelles, when my maßer, as he flaggered home, was accofted by a female, who had fomething in her air and manner fo different from those outcafts of humanity, who offer themfeltes to cafual profitution in the flreets, that his curiofity was flruck, and he flopped to take more particular notice of her-She appeared to be about fifteen. Her figure was elemant, gant, and her features regular; but want had ficklied o'er their beauty; and all the horrors of defpair gloomed through the languid fimile file forced, when the addreffed him.

The figh of diffrefs, which nev er ftruck his ear without affecting his heart, came with do uble force from fuch an object. He viewed her with filent compaffion for fome moments ; and reaching her a piece of gold, bade her go home, and fhelter herfelf from the melemencies of the night, at fo late an hour. Her furprife and joy at fuch unexpected charity overpowered hera She dropped upon her knees, in the wet and dirt of the firet, and raifing her hands and eyes toward heaven, remained in that poflure for fome moments, unable to give otterance to the gratitu de that filled her heart.

Such a fight was more expressive than all the powers of eloquence. He railed her tenderly from the ground, and foothing her with words of comfort, efferted to conduct her to fome place, where the might get that refreshment of which the appeared to be in too great want. 'O! Sir, (faid the, pressing the hand that had railed her, with her cold treinbling lips) my deliveren, fent by heaven to fave me from delpair, let me not think of taking refreshment myfelf, till I have first precured it for thole, whole greater wants I feel ten themfand times more feverely than my own.'

• Who can they be? (interrupted he with anxious impatience) Can homanity feel greater wants, than • thole under which you are finking ?

"My father, (exclaimed flee, burfling into tears) la mguilding under infirmities, acquired in the fervice of his country; my mother; word out with attending on hum, and both perifiking for want, (heaven grant they are aof, already dead!) together with two infant brothers, infentible of the caufe of their diffrefs, and crying to them. for a morfel of bread, which it is not in their power to, give.'

L 2

and

"Where can fuch a forme of wretchednefs be hidden, from relief? I'll go with you myfelf directly! but ftop ! let us firft procure fome comfortable nourithment from fome of the house, which are kept open at this late hour, for a very different purpose. Come with me is we have no time to lofe."----With these words, he went directly to a tavern, and enquiring what victuals were dreffed in the house, loaded her with as much as fhe could carry of the beft, and putting a couple of bottles of wine in his own pocket, walked with her to her has bitation, which was in a blind alley, happily for her not very far diffant, as weaknefs, together with the conflict of pathons firuggling in her heart, made her fcarce able to go.

When they came to the door, fhe would have gone up first for a light, but he was refolved to accompany her, that he might fee the whole foene in its genuine colours. He therefore followed her up to the top of the houle, where, opening the door of the garret, fine discovered to him fuch a feene of mifery, as firuck him with aftenishment. By the light of a lamp, that glimmmered in the firelefs chimney, he faw lying on a bare hedflead, without any other covering than the relieks of their own rags, a man, a woman, and two children, fluddering with cold, though huddled together, to fhare the little warmth, which exhausted nature fill fupplied them with.

While as fload gazing in horror at fuch complicated wretch-

ADVENTURES de A GUINPA.

with hedness, his conducteds ran to the bed-fide, and filling on her knees, ' O! Sir! Macam! (exclaimed fir in rapture) Arife ! I have not relief from an augel of heaven !?.....

"Take care I (answered a voice, the hollow trens Ming of which was tharpened with indignation) take dare it is not from a fiend of hell, who has taken advant tage of your diffusis to tempt you to ruin! for with whom elie could you be till this time of night ? But know, wretched girl, that I will mover cat the earnings of vice and infamy. A fow hours will put an end to my mileties, which have received the only poffible ada dition by this your folly."

. He must be fuch indeed (interrupted my mafter, fill more funck with fentiments for uncommon in funchwituation) who could think of tempting her in fuchsircumftances to any folly. I will withdraw, while you arise, and then we will confirst, what wan be foonof done to alleviate a distrets, of which you appear in and slewing." While he faid this, he trok the wine ant of his pockets, and giving it to the daughter, weat directly down flairs, without waiting for a reply; and, wathing back and forward in the fireet for fome sime, enjoyed the fubliment pleafure the human heart is camable as, in confidering how he had relieved, and thousid . farther selieve, the fufferings of objects fo worthy of relief.

By the time he thought they might have learned from their daughter the circumflances of her meeting with him, and taken fome nourifhment, he returned to them, when she moment he entered the room, the whole family fell upon their knees to thank him. Such humiliation was more than he could bear. He thild them, one by one, L 3, as faft as he could, and taking the father's hand, " Gracious God! (faid he) can a fenfe of humanity be fuch an uncommon three among encatures, who call themfelves human, that fo poor an exertion of it thould be shought deferving of a return, proper to be made only to heaven ? Opprefs me not, Sir, I conjuze you, with the mention of what it would have been a crime, I could never have forgiven myfelf, to have known I had not done. It is too late to think of leaving this place before to morrow, when I will provide a better, if there is not say to which you chuse particularly to ge. I am not rich ; but thank heaven, that it has bleffed me with ability and inclination to afford fuch affiftance as may be immediately secoliary to you, till means may he shought of for doing more." e. . .

as

226

O. Sir, (answered the mother) well might my staughter call you an angel of heaven I You know not from what mittery you have already pelieved."

. Nor will I know more of it at this time, (intersupted my mafter) than that which I too plainly fer. I will leave you now to your reft, and return as from as it is day."

Sneak not of leaving us, Sir! (exclaimed the daughter, who was afiaid that if he fhould go away, he might not return) what reft can we take in fe fhort a stime? Leave us not, I beleach you ! leave us not in this place !?----

"Ceafe, my shild ! (interrupted the father) nor prefs croux benefactor to continue in a fenne of mifery, that must give pain to his humane heart.'--- maker) I will most willingly flay; but it must be on condition that our conversation points entirely forward 7. .

ADVENTURES of A GUINEA. 127

whippier days. There will be time enough hereafter to look back?

Saying this, he fat down on the bed fide (for other feat the apartment afforded none) between the huiband and wife, with whom ne fpent the little remainder of the night, in fuch discourse as he thought most likely to divert their attention from their prefent milery, and imfpire their minds with better hopes, while the children, all but the daughter who hang upon his words, somiforted at heart with a better meal than they had long tafked, fiel fall affeep, as they leaned their leads upon wher mether's lap.

As foon as it was day, "Now, Madam, (faid my mafter, addreffing himfelf to the mother) I will go and provide a place for your reception, as you fay all-places one alike to you. In the mean time accept of this triffe (giving her ten guineas) to provide fisch necessaries, as you may indifficultly with before you remove. When you are fittled, we will fee what further can be done. I fhall be back with you within these three hours at moft."

For fach beneficence there was no poffibility of retarning thanks; but their hearts fpoke through their eyes, in a language fufficiently intelligible to his. Departing directly to fave both himfelf and them the pain of parfising a conversition that gaw 200 diffrefsful, he went without regard to change of drefs or appearance, to look for a proper lodging for them, where he had in fach provisions of every kind, as hoknew they must hamediately want. This care employed him till the time he had promised to return, when he found fuch an alteration in the looks and appearance of them ally an every his heart delight

4 You

• You fee, Sir, (faid the mother, at foon as he entered) the effects of your bounty; but do not think that vanity has made us ablie it. These cloaths, what we fould raise on which has for fome time been our fole import, were the purchase of happier times; and were now redeemed for much lefs than we must have given for the worlt we could buy.---

<sup>6</sup> Dear Madam, (interrupted my statter, taking her hand refpectfully) mention not any thing of the kind to me, I befeech you. You will foon fee fuch times againt.<sup>2</sup> Then turning to the hufband, <sup>6</sup> I have taken a lodging, Sir; (continued he) it is convenient, but not large, as I imagined would be your choice. I will call a coach to take us to it directly. If there are any demands here, let the people of the house be called up, and they shall be paid. I will be your purforbance for the prefent.<sup>2</sup>

'No, Sir, (replied the hufband) there are not any. You have enabled us to difcharge all demainds upon us. Recepte in our circumfiances cannot find credit, becaule they want it.'

My mafter would then have gone for a coach, but the charghter infilled on faving him that trouble; upon which he put the whole family into it, and walked away before them to their new lodging. It is impoffible to deferibe what there poor people fait, when they faw the provision he had made for their reception. The father, in particular, could not bear it, but fanking into settiar, 'This is too much ! (faid he, as foon as a flood setters had given yent to the fullnefs of his heart) This is too much. Support me, gratious hearens, who has feat this beft of men to my relief, fupport in particular, of the weight of obligations, which the preference of the first.

Digitized by Google

m8

ADVENTURES or A GUINEA.

My malter, who fought none, attempted often to give the converfation another turn; but finding that they could fpeak or think of nothing elfe as yet, he took his leave, promising to come the next day, when their minds should be better fettled, to confult what more was in his power to ferve them, having first privately taken an opportunity to flip a couple of guineas into the daughter's hand, to avoid the putting the deheacy of her father and mother to farther pain.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK-

CHRYSAL

CHRYSAL:

OR, THE

ADVENTURES

01 A

GUINEA.

BOOK H.

CHAP. L

CURRYSAL gives fome account of bis master. Reafor of bis baving been bred to, and miscarried in a particular profession. Interesting remarks on the different kinds of verit vecessary to eminence in different professions, confirmed by skriking instances of their success in each. Natural confequence of bis being forced into a profession against bis inelination. He is compelled by distress to exert bis abilities. Contradiction in bis character, and the particular turn of bis works accounted for. He wists bis new family. Affecting fory of an officer.

HATIGUED in mind and body from the debauch of the evening before, and the height to which his tendereft paffions had been wound up by fuch a moving moving feene,' ray mafter went directly home, and throwing himfelf on the bed, flept till next morning, without diffurbance from pain or reflection.

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

121

The contradictions, which I had feen in his character, prompted my cariolity to take this opportunity of looking back to his paft life, to try if in the occurrences of that I could trace their caufe. Born in the middle rank of life, his parents were induced by the dawnings of uncommon genus, which he difcovered in his carlieft youth, to give him fuch an education, as might enable hun to make that figure in fome of the learned proteffions, for which paternal fondness flattered them that nature had defigued him.

But however greatly he profited by his education, the end propoled by it was far from being pleating to his inclinations, which the vigour of his mind and body, turned to more active fornes. For this reafon, when he was to quit the purfuits of general learning for those of fome particular profession, his ardour coobed, and he entirely fost that fpirit of emulative ambition, which alone can enable a man to arrive at eminence.

Such a falling-off could not escape the anxious obfervation of his friends; but as it was not in their power either to remedy it, or gratify his inclination in any other way, all they could do was to enter him into the fervice of religion, a profetion in which though the greatest abilities and application of the human mind, are evidently and indiffersibly necessary, yet by the pervertion of man, the least are required.

You feem flocked at the feverity of this remarks, but a moment's reflection will open to you the reafon upon which it is founded. In every other profession, fuccels fuccels depends upon an apinion of that knowledge which is called merit in it, because mankind for the neceffity of fuch merit to attain the object of the projetfion. But in the church, the cafe is quite different, Every man thinks that he knows enough of religion to forve his own turn, and therefore gives himself no trouble about the knowledge of those who profess it, as he concludes that knowledge can be of no fervice to him; and therefore fuccefs in the church depends not on a general opinion of merit, but on particular favour, which for the realon given before, is not the necessary confiquence of fuch merit. An attorney or furgeon, for inftance, who is not thought to have fome merit in his profession, will never be employed ; but let him by any means get into the church, and curry favour with thole in power, and he may rife to the first dignities of it, though he has no more merit in this protestion, than he had in that, which he was forced to quit for want of bread. And this is the reafon, why they who have least abilities for any profeliion are packed into this; and why, they again, who have the least of these are generally most successful in it ; as confcioufnels of their want of merit makes them take most pains to gain favour.

152

The confequence of his entering into fuch a profefion against inclination is obvious. An indignant fenfe of his own natural superiority to his superiors in flation, made him fall into the too common error of arguing from the abuse, against the use, and hold in contempt not only them, but also the very profession itself, in which they could have such success, and in which neceffity alone obliged him to continue. He difdained to apply abilities which he thought above the end ! He neglected neglected duties, which he faw abufed ; and at length funk into-a state of listles indifference, in which he would have died in obscurity, had not diffrefs rouzed him, and extorted an exertion of his abilities, which a mind foured by disappointment of its earliest hopes, and by domestic unhappinels after, turned to fatire. with an afperity and firength, that made vice tremble in the bolom of the great, and folly hide her head in the highest places.

ADVENTURES of A GUINEA.

133

As this domestic unhappines was the immediate caufe of those parts of his conduct, which contradicted the general tenour of his character, justice requires that fome account should be given of it. In the capricious levity of youth, he fixed his inclination on a female. who had no other recommendation, belide beauty. Prudence would have forbidden a match, in which there was to little prospect of happines, but men of great abilities too often think it beneath, them to liften to her voice. He married her, though, in the phrafe of the world, evidently to his ruin ; the return fhe made him for which proof of his love, was infidelity to his bed. This is the deepest wound that can be given to an heart of any delicacy; it fharpens the fling of ingratitude with infult, by giving a preference, that reflects diffionour. He felt it fo feverely, that defpair made him strive to drown the sense of it in wine, in the intoxication of which, he too often was guilty of what in a cooler moment his reafon would have bluthed at. and his principles abhorred ; which, as I observed, forced him to exert his abilities, which he did with fush fuccels, as foon enabled him to guit a profession, that had not been his choice, and at the fame time indulge VOL. IV. м the the natural dispolition of his heart, by practiling tome of the lublimed duties effit.

124

As foon as he awoke next day, he went to vifit his new family, where the happiness that gliftened in every grateful eye at his approach, made him happy. After fome general chat, ' It is my shuty, Sir, (faid the father) to give you fome account of myfelf, and of the eaufe of my falling into that depth of milery from which your beneficence relieved me, that you should not think it has been lavished on objects altogether unworthy of it.

<sup>6</sup> I am defeended from a good family, the fortune of which my father diffipated in fupporting a parliamentary intereft for the minifry; the only return he received for which, and for his voice upon all escalions, was a fmall penfion for himfelf, and a pair of calous in the guards for me his only fon, with promifes indeed of farther provision, which were all forgotten when he died, happily for himfelf before the end of the parliament, which, as he had no prospect of being nturned again, would have left him at the morey of creditors, whom it was not in his power to pay.

'Though I was foon fenifie that my ball hopes, died with him, I was fo infatuated to a profition, the most pleasing to youthful idlensis and vanity, that I laid out the little fortune of this best of women, whom I had married in my days of better hope, in the purchafe of a company, in a marching regimest; at the head of which I flattered myfelf, that I should meet 'fome opportunity, in the war just then broke out, of meriting further promotion. But I found the vanity of fuch a thought, when it was unhappily too late.

'After feveral years earchil fervice, in the course of which

ADVENTURES OF & GUINEA.

TOC

which I had fealed fome degree of reputation with my blood in feveral warm actions, without advantage to my felf, or prospect of any to my family, who now nultiplied the cases of life ten thousand fold upon my head. I was driven by defpair to exchange my company, which I had bought, and therefore could have fold again, the price of which would at leaft have kent us from absolute farving, for an higher rank in a younger regiment, just then ordered upon an expedition, the object of which miled what was thought rational especiation of fuch profit, as fhould cafe me from the anxieties that made life, a burden.

· Althred folely by this expectation, I went accordingly. The expedition was fuecefeful. I did my duty. I was wounded in the course of it, to the extreme danger of my life. Leatirely raised my conflication by the feverity of the climate; and on my return home was reduced to half-pay, without receiving fo much prize money, as defrayed the extraordinary expenses of the expedition, and of the illness which I contracted in it : while those above me accumulated fuch wealth as If divided in any degree of proportion, would have recompensed the labours of us, who had literally borne the heat and burden of the day, and were now pining in difficutent and milery, appravated by a partiality fo feverely injurious.

In this fituation, I refolved to throw myfelf at the feet of my Sovereign, and implore relief from the known goodnefs of his heart. But his throne was furrounded by those, whole interest it was to keep the cries of his people from coming to his ears *; and therefore, as it was necessary for me to make my errand known, I never could obtain access to him.

* This reflection, notorioully fo groundlels, is alone fuffici-ent to vindicate the author from any allafion to prefent times. . M 2 therefore,

136

' The diffrels of this difappointment was fill farther heightened by the delays in the difcharge of that halfpay, which was now my only fupport; and the drawbacks it was fubject to from the fees of office, even when it should come to be paid, which were fuch, that when I attempted to mortgage it, the wretch's laft refource to put off flarving as long as he can, what I could get from those vultures, who fatten upon the fufferings of a foldier, was fcarce fufficient to fatisfy our prefent wants. How then could I look forward for a family, dearer to me than life? What could furport refolution, when hope was gone? Mine was unernal to the trial; and I was beginning to meditate on putting an end to a life of fuch milery, without confidering that the fufferings of those, for whom I felt fo much more than for myfelf, must be still made heavier by fuch a bale defertion of them, when heaven in its mercy vifited my family with a violent fever. which freed me from farther fears for the future welfare of my three eldeft lons, and with difficulty fpared the two, whom you fee before you. O! my poor boys! happier ! thrice happier than us, whom you left behind! Excufe this weakness, Sir! nature will force the involuntary tear in fpite of reason; for were they not the children of my love ?

• During their illnels, I loft every other care in my attendance upon them; nor omitted any poffible means to preferve lives, for which my fears foreboded nothing but unhappinels; but though their deaths freed me from a part of those fears, they left a melancholy void in my heart, which was more painful, if poffible, than

anV

ADVENTURES OF & GUINEA. 137

My children were fearce laid in the grave, when the fiver feized myfelf with fuch violence, that I foon loft my fenfes, nor recovered them for above a month; and then only to feel the greatelt wretchednefs, that was ever heaped upon human creature.

'The expense of my children's, and my own illnefs, had not only exhapled all the money I had raifed on the anticipation of my half-pay, but alfo obliged my wife to mortgage feveral of our belt effects. Such a refource never efcapes the watchful eyes of people who keep ledging-baules. Our landlady no fooner perceived it, than the feined upon the reft, and then turned us out, the moment I could be removed without influent death.

'In this fituation. I must have perified in the first, had not a poor woman, whom my wife had been obliged to call in to her affiftance when I fickened, flured with us her habitation, in which you found us, as the also did the earnings of her daily labour, till a chairman, who was carrying a beau to a ball, show her down with fisch violence, for not making hafte enough out of his way, that fhe broke her leg, and was obliged to be taken to an hofpital.

<sup>4</sup> From that sime we imported life by mortgaging the few elother we had brought on our backs, without any ray of hope to tempt is to look forward, till they she were all gone, and the milery of cold added to that of hunger. In this condition, we had been two days without tailing bread, or feeling the warmth of fire, calling incofinntly upon death to put that end to our difficiles, which a finite of religion made firenger by my wretchednels, now prevented my daring to ha-M 3

'Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

fien, when my daughter ftole out unknown to us to jeck for charity in the firests, where fhe wandered without meeting any thing but infults, and folieitations to vice, till heaven directed your fleps to her.

1:8

'Such was the reward of more than twenty years faithful and hard fervice, in which I had fought the battles of my country, in the opposite extremities of the globe, with honour, and been infrumental in making princely fortunes for the feveral commanders under whom I ferved.

'This, Sir, is the fifth of my flory, in which I have been as brief as it could, to avoid giving you pain. We are now your creatures. The lives we enjoy are immediately the gift of your benevolence; a benevolence, fo critically timed, (for we could not have subfished many hours longer without it) as to raife an hope, that Providence which fent you' to our relief, will not leave its work unfanished, but fave us from falling again into such milery, by means agreeable to its own wifdom and goodnels, though impofible for us, in our prefent fituation, to forefee.'

It was fome time before my mafter, who had liftened to the officer's flory with fympathetic attention, was able to fpeak. Recovering himfelf at length, 'Fer not;' (faid he, in a broken voice) ' never was the righteous forfaken; nor---nor--nor. I have fome friends, Sir, who may ferve!----In the mean time take this, (reaching him a bank-note for twenty pounds) I will not be refufed! bufinefs calls me for a few hours; but I will fee you again in the evening.'----Saying this, he hurried away to hide his emotions without waiting for a reply, which indeed their gratitude left them not the power to make.

CHAP.

CHAP. H.

CHENSAL'S master carries bim to visit an old aegusinitance, who behaves in character, on hearing the officer's story, and surprises CHENSAL'S master with an account of his having turned PATRIOT. The general motive for such a step; with some remarks on the difference between practice and profession, in different instances. Infignificancy of private characters in attacks upon a ministry, and why. Reflections on the origin and use of sa-TIRE, and the abuse of the terms GOOD and ILL-NATURE, with the reason why so many cry out against stire. CHENSAL changes his fervice in a common way.

THE most intimate acquaintance my master had was the perfon who had been competitor with a former master of mine, for admission into the higher order of THE MOCK-MONASTRY*. To him he went directly, and relating the officer's flory, while it was itill warm on his heart, asked his affiltance to do fomething more offectual for his relief.

His friend was fo affected with the melancholy tale, that it was fome time before he could fpeak; but when at length he did, it was in a ftrain very different from what might have been expected. 'And the girl was really fo pretty !' (faid he; with a look of inexpreffible archnefs) 'Well faid my good Levite, I prefume you fatisfied your own appetites with her at the tavern, before you provided for those of her family, though you * Vel. 3.

lunk

329

CHRYSAL: OL ME

innk that part of the flory, for fear I fhould want to come in for a fnack with you. The concupifcence of you parlons is truly catholic, whatever your confeences may be, and would engaged the whole fex, if it was not reftrained; not indeed that women come within the meaning of the Mostmain acts; as none do more good in their generation; and confequently are better reprefented to the flate, than those who are ocsupied by the clergy.'

Why, what a femfual brute mult you be, (anfwered my maker) to talk of fatisfying appetites with a wretch juft perifhing of cold and hunger. But it is all affectation. If you had been in my place, you would have acted juft as I did; for whatever airs your wicked wit may affume, I know your heart is flrongly fulceptible of charity.'

<sup>6</sup> Charity! Hah! hah! hah! I expected that. It is always the burden of a parfon's fong. They make a cloak of it upon all occations; and indeed, if it will really cover fins, as they fay, they are in the right to have it ready, for multitudes enough they have to take up every corner of it. But why can you not throw off the cant along with the cloth? However, that her hunger fhould not damp your defires any more, here (giving him half a dozen guineas) is my help to allay it.<sup>7</sup>

'I will not refule your money, for your own fast, in hope that your beflowing even this much fo well may help to atone for lome of the thousands you have thrown away. But it was not with any view of getting it, that I lipoke to you. Their immediate neceffities are implied. I want your affiliance and intereft.'----

. Digitized by Google

My

"My interest! Hah! hah! hah! ----You apply to a perfon of great interest truly. Why, my very naming them would be fufficient to ruin their hopes for ever. You don't know perhaps, that I have turned patriot, and attacked the ministry."

"Patriot ! For heaven's fake how long, and on what secation have you taken this ftrange whing?"

'Whim! Pray, good Sir, fpeak with more refpect of the nobleft principle of the human /heart. The thought came into my head the night before laft; and as I do not love to lofe time, effectially in things of fuch moment, I gave it yent yefterday in the fhape of a political pamphlet, in which I have proved to a demonftration, that the minifter and all his friends and countrymen are fools, and rogues, and delerve to be hang'd.<sup>2</sup>---

* Is it possible that you can be fericus! What in the name of common fenfe, could be your motive for taking fuch a step as this ? I thought you had expectation of favour from them."....

'What motive fhould any man of honour and honefly have, but the good of his country; their neglect of which has roufed an indignation that will make them tremble.'

• Or, in other words, they have difappointed your expectations, and therefore you take this method of being revenged on them, and extorting for fear, what they would not do from favour; the general motive of modern patriots I acknowledge; but with what face you can pretend to the title, profituted as it is, I can not think, as your very name is a burlefque upon every thing, that is ferious.<sup>2</sup>----

"Pray, how fo, Teverend and grave Sir ? If the moft pre-

14L

CHRYSAL: Os, THE

142

profigure finner makes the beft faint, as you fay, why should not a moderate rake make a tolerable politician? I believe you will hardly attribute it to the faputor excellance of the latter character; but the muth is, though it is impossible for me to profiss political primciples more contrary to my practice, than your moral practice is to your pseaching, yet you would deny me the toleration which you avail yourfelf of, and have my words judged from my actions; not my actions from my words, as you expect your own shall be

But my private character, or practice, fignifics nothing to this undertaking, which is to rip up the pretices and characters, public and private, of a let of people, who have obtruded themfelves into a flation that exposes them to envy, and every acculation against whom will therefore be received implicitely, without regarding who or what the author of it is. Not but there is fufficient room to attack those whole whole pri vate lives have been fuch a continued feries of vice and folly, and their public conduct of blunders and villainy, that it is impossible to fay or think any thing had e. nough of them, as I have already proved by incontellible inflances in my pamphlet, and fhall by many more in the course of the undertaking. If the tables indeed should turn, and I get into their place, then they may make the fame use of my character, and perhaps not without effect; but at prefent it is quite out of the question. And now that I have opened myfelf to you I expect your affiltance, in return for my confidence.

<sup>4</sup> Affiltance in politicks! It is not in my power to give you any. I hate from my foul, every political lyflem under the fun, as a jumble of fully and villainy, (I mean

(I mean as they are carried into practices, not in their forculative plans) and therefore never could throw away a thought upon thems?

<sup>4</sup> That fignifies nothing. The affiftance which I want, you are well qualified to give. While I detect their political blunders and villainy, you fhall laft their priwate wices and follies, till we make them equally ridis culous and odious to every man of fenfe and vistue in the nation; a task that will give you the pleafing opportunity of indulging that mifanthropy, which infpires the mufe of a fatirift, and is miflaken for wirtue, because it sails against vice; for blauon it out as pompoully as you will, nothing but ill-nature can make a man take delight in exposing the defects of others; and the more foreibly he does it, the more powerful must that principle be with him.....

" And by the fame rule, it is good sature that makes a man fawn upon folly, and flatter vice: and confeevently whoever does it, is virtuous. A most judicious way of reafoning truly ! now, on the contrary, I think it a much more just conclusion, that they who weat vice with tendernels approve it in their hearts, and would practice it, if they could; and that they who expose its deformities and dangers, really detelt it, though they may fometimes, through human weakness, fall into the practice. But I do not wonder at your remark : it is an old and common one. All who are confcious that they deferve the lafh, defire to leffen its force ; and therefore derive fatire from ill mature, in order to obviate the application of it to the proper object; and faften upon the fatirift the fault which is in themselves. And this thuse of the torms good and ill nature, is the ration reafon why fome have been provoked to call the former folly.

But not to walte time in difcuffions, where prejudice only can find a doubt. I agree to your propofal with pleasure, and will hold folly up to ridicule, and brand vice to detellation, wherever you point them out to me, without regard to the rank or power of the perfon; or to any imputations of milanthropy and filnature, which may be levelled at myfelf, to fhield against and blumt the edge of my fatire; though I no more expect that I shall be able to reform the moral, than you the political conduct of the age. However, it is a duty to make the attempt, be the fuecels what it will. But, by the bye, are you not apprehenfive, that your undertaking may be attended with danger? The people in power will certainly be provoked; and power, you know, has long arms, and will often reach over the fences of law."

' I fear them not! I have friends who are able, and will defend the laws in me, while I keep within their fence; one of the principal of whom I expect every minute to call upon me, to communicate matter, and to confult upon another flroke.'

'Then I'll take my leave. You'll have things to talk about, which you will not define me to hear. Confpirators against the flate always chuse privacy.'

<sup>4</sup> Confipirators against the flate! Our confipiracy, if fuch you call it, is for the flate, against its worke enemies, traitors to the trust reposed in them; all fools to their own true interest, as members of the community.<sup>2</sup>

"All this I'll grant; and yet it is well, if they do not find means to make themfelves pais for the flate, and of course, you for the traitors against it. They who have the power, can easily assume the name.'

and

2

As he faid this, a fervant brought his friend a note, who upon caffing his eye over it, 'The gentleman I expected (faid he) writes me word that he is not very well this morning, and therefore defires to fee me at his house. If you are going my way, I'll fet you down.'

'I thank you! (answered my masser) But my ambition does not rife to high as that yet. I do not afpire to a pillory, or a prifon, even in the caufe of my country. Shall we fee you at dinner?

• Most certainly! but hold. Can you give me change for this note? I have not time to call upon my banker.---

'I believe I can; but then it must be with the help of what you yourfelf have given me for the officer; like other bankers, who make a parade of taking in charitable fubforiptions, at the fame time that they fupport their credit with the money.'

'That's right! I'll mention him to the perion I am going to. He has abilities to ferve him effectually; and I am fatisfied never wants inclination to do a generous action.'--My mafter then gave him the change of his note, among which I was, and took his leave.

Vol. IV.

CHAP.

Digitized by GOOgle

146 CHRYSAL: OR, THE

CHAP. III.

CHRYSAL fums up the character of his late maßer. Different opinions for and against the propriety and henefit of SATIRE. The former supported by good authority. Reason of some inconveniencies attending the indulgence of such a turn. Character of CHRYSAL'S new master concluded from a former sketch. He waits upon his Patron. Character of him, with his motive for such patronage. He gives striking reasons for objecting to some parts of CHRYSAL'S master's pamphlet, which the other makes some weak attempts to vindicate. CHRYSAL'S master enjoys the pleasure of tracing his own fame.

THE peculiar character of my late mafter made me feel regret at leaving his fervice till I should fee more of him. His abilities did honour to the age and country in which he lived : and the exalted featiments of virtue, which broke from him fpontaneoully, in the genuine effusions of his foul, gave fufficient reafon to judge, that his conduct would be entirely ruled by it. and his talents exerted in the more pleasing and extenfive way of recommending it to imitation, by difplaying all its advantages and charms, as foon as time should cool the fervour of tils pattions, and apply its r lenient baliam to the fores in his heart, the fmart of which first gave him that poignant turn, and drove him for relief to excelles that too often drowned his better reafon, and led him into actions, which in a coofer moment ment he abhorred. In a word, his failings were the luxuriance of nature, as his virtues were her perfection.

Digitized by GOOGL

As I have faid that he turned his poetical vein particularly to fatire. I fee your curiofity to know my opimon of the propriety, and benefit of that manuer of applying the powers of wit. But I have often told you, that I am not permitted to determine controverted points. Many with a plaufible appearance of good-nature decry it, as proceeding from a malevolence of difpolition, and tending only to fpread the influence of bad example by making it known, and harden people in vices they might forfake, if not made defnerate by detection! Many with an appearance of virtuous indignation vindicate it, as terrifying from vice, by fhewing it in its native deformity, and correcting folly, by putting it out of countenance; which latter opinion is fupported by the authority of one of the most fensible and belt men of his age #.

But still the indulgence of this turn is attended with many inconveniencies and dangers, if it be not guided with the greatest care. That imaginary superiority, which the power of making another ridiculous or detessed flatters a man with, is so pleasing to the felf-love infeparable from human nature, that it requires uncommon moderation to refrain from exercising it upon improper occasions, and makes him prefumptuoufly conclude,

* Would the anachronifm admit the fuppolition, the editor fhould imagine that the author here meant the writer of LETTERS FROM A PERSIAN IN ENGLAND, &c. whole words are thefe, 'If all the edge of wit is turned on thole who are juftly the objects of ridicule, Wit is as great a benefit to PRIVATE LIFE, as the fword of the magifirate is to FUELIC. Letter 40.---- clude, that whatever happens to difpleafe himself in any particular, is a just object of public ridicule and censure. An error, into which the impetuosity of my late master fometimes hurried him.

N 2

147

I have given you a fketch of the character of my new malter upon a former occasion +; to which I have only to add here, that a wanton abufe of uncommon abilities inverted the end for which they were given, making them difgraceful to himfelf, and dangerous to his country, a licentious purfuit of every thing called pleafure having walted his fortune, and driving him to the defpicable neceffity of profituting them to any purpole; that might promife to retrieve his affairs.

The gentleman, whom he went to wait upon the morning I came into his pofferfion, was one who had ferved his king and country with fidelity and fuccefs, while he was permitted to follow the dictates of his own reason in their fervice; but gave up the empty and difgraceful appearance of acting in it any longer, on finding his judgment diffegarded, and himself defigned to be made only a cypher, to increase the confequence of another.

The indignation, however, which had prompted him to take this flep, led him not into those unjustifiable lengths, which are too common on fuch occasions. He was faithful to his Sovereign, though he had lost his favour; and watched attentively over the interests of his country, though he was not permitted to promote them. The only inflance in which his conduct could possibly be censured was his patronizing such a man as my master. But it is a maxim in human politicks, that the end justifies the means, be they what they will. He wanted to be reftored to his former power ; and thought this man's expoling the infufficiency of those who had supplanted him in it, the most likely way to effect that purpole.

+ Vol. III.

wanted

149

To this defire of power he was not flimulated by the ufual method of repairing a ruined fortune, or making a new family. His wealth exceeded his very withes, and he already enjoyed the highest honours he could afpire to: all he proposed was the glory of his Sovereign, and the advantage of his country, which that enthufiaftic ambition, from whence proceed the greatest actions, made him think himfelf the most capable, and with to be the happy inftrument of promoting.

By this gentleman, my mafter was received with that civility which is commonly milfaken for effeem. After fome general chat on the occurrences and humour of the times, in which my master modefily took to himfelf the merit of the peoples difcontent at the ministry and their measures, as raised folely by his pamphlet, 'I allow the good effects of it (faid the gentleman) and greatly approve the principles upon which it is written: but I much fear that your zeal has transported you too far. You fhould of all things have avoided involving the malter in your charge against the ministers; because that alone can give them any advantage against you. and is therefore what they always feign, however up justly, when they are attacked in order to fcreen themfelves behind him. Befide, the character of a Sovereign is facred, and fhould never be treated but with the higheft refpect; efpecially when the virtues of the man are fuch as would be refpectable in any character."

Such difapprobation from his principal patron great. ly difappointed my mafter, who was fo little acquaintseđ

ed with his fentiments, as to think he bore refentment against his Sovereign for the loss of his favour, as well as against those who had deprived him of it, and confequently would be pleased with any thing, that might feem to reflect difgrace upon him.

Recovering himfelf however, before his embarralment was perceived, 'I imagined (anfwered he, with his ufual prefence of mind) that it was impossible to accuse me of difference to one, whom I have fludiously fought every occasion of praising. As for what you take notice of my charge is not perfonally against him, but through him against those who had the baseness and infolence to abuse his goodness and confidence in fuch a manner; to that I think it is impossible to wrest it to the purpose you apprehend '---

' I wifh you may not be miltaken; but much fear that your argument will not have the weight you expect. Praife given with an air of irony is the keeneft infult; befide, in this particular cafe, the praifes you beflow upon his goodnefs are all at the expence of his underflanding: However, do not be difpirited at what cannot now be helped. As I think your intention was not in fault, you may depend upon my countenance and fupport, let what will happen.'

This comfortable affurance reftored my mafter to his former fpirits: not deliring however to continue the converfation any longer upon that fubject, 'I have this morning (faid he) made no inconfiderable addition to our force. My friend, the poet, whole turn for fatire I have heard you fo much admire, has promifed me to exert all his powers in our caufe. He will attack the faults in their private, while I expose their public characters, and experience has shewn that it is easy to overturn

ligitized by GOOgle

turn the minister, when the man is made ridiculous, or odious '-----

'The former I'll grant you; but we have too many inftances in contradiction to the latter, to build much upon it. However, his powers are great, and may do much, if he will take care to avoid the rock upon which you have fallen; and therefore I shall be glad to attach him feriously to us, especially as he does not feem to be utterly void of virtue, notwithstanding the libertinism of his conduct in fome inftances.'

My maker would not mifs fo favourable an opportunity of doing justice to the character of his friend. Accordingly he related the ftory of the diffress of the officer and his family, and his generofity to them, in fo affecting a manner, that the gentleman directly gave him a considerable fum of money for their prefent relief, with a promise of providing for them himself, if he could not prevail with those in power to do it.

Pleafed with a fuccefs which he knew would be fo pleafing to his friend, my mafter took leave of his patron, and fet out to trace his own fame from one coffeehoufe to another, and enjoy the applaufes, which the popularity and boldnefs of his attempt, procured him from the multitude wherever he went; after which he repaired to his ufual haunt, where he dined, and fpent the evening, in his ufual manner-

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

CHAP-IV.

CHRYVAL'S mafter receives an unwelcome wift, ab on unfeafonable time. His entraordinary bebaviour before bis fuperions. He is fent to prifon. CHRYVAL makes fome unpopular remarks, on certain intercfling fubjects. Confequences of bis mafter's imprifonment, with an account of bis bebaviour in it.

CONFIDENT as my malter was of his fafety, he foon found that the fears of his patron were too jull. He had fearce laid him down to fleep, when his bed was furrounded, and himfelf made a prifoner, by a number of fellows, who, under the fanction of authority, committed all the outrages of lawlefs ruffians, breaking open his locks, rifling his effects, and fearching into all his fecrets.

It was in vain for him to expolulate with fuch people against fo flagrant injustice, or claim the protection of the laws. They derided him, and all he could fay; and having finished their work, dragged him away with infults and abuse, to a magistrate, where he had the comfort of waiting a confiderable time in fuch agreeable company, before his worship was at leisure to fee him.

But this, though defigned as an indignity, was of real advantage to him, as it gave him time to recover his fpirits, and collect his prefence of mind for an interview of fuch importance. Accordingly, when at length he was admitted to the dread tribunal, inflead of flaewing any dejection at the danger which feemed to hang over him, he

Digitized by GOOgle

he behaved in a manner worthy of a better ma better caufe. He afferted the violation of the his perfon, with 10 much refolution, and appearance of reafon, and returned the infolence of office with fuch contempt, anfwering illufively to the infidious queftions put to him, and boldly demanding that right of being reflored to his hierty, which was affured to every individual of the community by the effential principles of the conflictution, that his judges were flartled, and more than once wifhed they had left him unmolefied.

However, as there was no receding now, they concluded it to be their belt way to go through with what they had begun, and bear down oppolition with an high hand; with which intent they fent him directly to prilon, in defiance to all he could fay, where he was treated with uncommon feverity, and the method which the law provided for his being reftored to liberty eluded as long as poffible, by finefles which power only could fupport.

I fee your indignation at fuch an infringement of laws procured by the blood of myriads, and eftablifhed by the moft folemn engagements human and divine, for the fecurity of the common rights of mankind. The part which every man feels in fuch fufferings, on a fuppolition that they may poffibly one day fall upon himfelf, naturally interefts you, as it did the multitude, in my mafter's caufe. But when you come to examine coolly the manner of his being taken into confinement, which is what gives you fuch offence, it will not appear to contrary to reafon and juffice, the foundation, and as I may fay, foul of all laws, as popular opinion may prefume.

All power is delegated from the people for the mutual

thal advantage of governors and governed. To fupport the ufe, and prevent the abule of that power, laws are established by the confent of both, which are to be the rule of their actions. But as it is impossible for human wildom to forefee and provide for every occurrence that may happen, there is effentially implied in the first trust a further power of applying unprovided remedies to unforefeen cafes, for the fafety and advantage of the whole.

If it be objected, that thele remedies may fometimes be injurious to individuals, by being injudicioufly or wrongfully applied, the anfwer is obvious. The fufferings of a few, are not to be fet in competition with the fafety of the many. Befide, if the remedies were neverto be applied, where there was a poffibility of a miftake, the evil might happen, in the time neceffary for enquiry and deliberation. For, though penal laws are defign'd only to prevent future by the punifhment of paft crimes; yet where fuch crimes, if committed, will exceed the reach of punifhment, and defeat the laws, the power of prevention muft be exerted earlier to anticipate them before commiffion.

Without fuch a power, the truft of government would be imperfect, and inadequate to the end; as if no punifhment could be inflicted thus for prevention, but by preferibed forms, human ingenuity, ever molt fertile in evil, would devife expedients to evade it, till perpetration fhould fecure impunity, as I faid before, perhaps to the run of the flate.

For these reasons, an extraordinary power mult have been implicitly given for extraordinary cases; or the good of the community, which is the end of government, cannot be obtained. If this power though should be

Digitized by Google

be abuled, the facred fpirit of the laws of your happy country will fupply the inevitable defect of the latter, end grant redrefs to the fufferer, when a proper time comes for enquiring into the circumflances of the cafe; a redrefs which was not provided by the people *, the molt jealous of their liberties of any who ever united themfelves into civil fociety, who, fenfible of the neceffity of fuch a refource, made it a fundamental rule of their government, on any occasions of uncommon difficulty or danger, to intruft the whole power into the hands of fome one perfon whom they called DICTATOR, as his word was to be the law, without fubjecting him to controul in the ufe, or account for the abufe of it, when his power fhould be at an end.

As foon as my maîter's imprifonment was known, the populace all took fire. They made his caufe their own. They looked upon him as a martyr in the darling caufe of liberty. They infulted all government, and committed exceffes every hour, infinitely more illegal and dangerous to liberty, than that of which they complained.

In the mean time, his confinement was far from fitting fo heavy upon him as might have been expected. Though he wanted the approbation of his own mind, and the enthuliafm of the principles he profefied, to fupport his refolution, and encourage him to look forward with hope, levity of temper fupplied the place of that refolution, and faved him from linking under misfortunes, by making him infentible of their weight. He rallied his jailors, mimicked his judges, cracked jefts upon his own undoing, and turned every circumfance into ridicule, with fuch drollery and unconcern, as if he was acting the imaginary inferings of another, not actually fuffering himfelf. How long he would have been able to fupport that fpirit though came not to be tried.

* The Romans.

155

CHRYSAL: OB, THE

156

CHAP. V.

CHENNAL'S master is wisted in prifon by bis patron; and from what motives. His conduct on being fet at liberty, and the confequences of it. Remarkable grounds on which be was fet at liberty, with a conjecture at the reason of fixing upon them. CHENNAL makes an enquiry into certain matters, much talked of, and little understood.

As foon as his friends obtained accefs to him (for the great feverity of his confinement was the ancommon firitnefs of it) his patron went to fee him. As I have taken sotice of his difapprobation of what had brought my mafter into this forape, you are furprized at his taking a flep that feemed fo inconfiftent with bis character. But his motives for it did honour to the man, however firange they may appear in the politician. He had admitted him to a degree of perfonal intimacy. He had approved of his engaging in a caufe, to which be was himfelf attached moft fanguinely, and he foorned to defert him in diffrefs, occafioned by what he thought an error of his judgment, not a fault of his intention.

Befide the confolation to himfelf, the honour of fuch a vifit was of the greateft advantage to my mafter's affairs; as it lightened the perfonal prejudice against 3 him, and gave a good opinion of a caufe, which appeared to have the countenance of fuch a man.

Digitized by Google.

Intoxicated with the popularity he had thus acquired, which if rightly managed might lave done great matters, he was no fooner at liberty, than he threw off all reftraint, and ran into fuch licentioufnefs, as in a fhort time leffened its force, and loft him every trace of the good opinion of all who gave themfelves time to think of the caufes and confequences of fuch conduct. But his triumph was not long-lived.

He had been reflored to his liberty, not as a right common to all the members of the community, on a fuppolition of the illegality of the manner in which he had been deprived of it; but in confequence of certain immunities, annexed to a particular part of the legiflature, to which he belonged.

Though the abilities and integrity of the magiltrate who made this diffinction were unquefionable, fome perfors who looked farther than the prefent moment, imagined they could trace it to a caufe not commonly attended to. He had on former occafions been infrummental in depriving fome people of liberty in the fame manner : to have condemned that manner therefore now, as illegal, would have been condemning himfelf; at the fame time, that upright obedience to the dictates of his prefent opinion, obliged him to fet him free. Such a difficulty muft have been diffreffing; but this diffunction delivered him from it; and enabled him to fave his credit and conficience both; as those people had bore no part in the legiflature, and therefore had not been entitled to fuch immunity.

I fee your indignation arife at the thought, that in a country which boafts of being governed by equal Vot. IV. O laws, laws, any one fet of men should enjoy immunities, dunied to the reli; but that inclignation proceeds from viewing the matter in a partial light. In the country where your lot, has happily fallen, the end of government is better fecured by a division of its powers, thus in any other under heaven. The great wildow of thole who made this division, appears in the provisiont made to preferve each part in it, independent of the soft, the only means by which the division itself could be preferved.

Digitized by Google

158

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

Now as the curcutive power needlarily belongs folly to the prince, it was equally needlary to facure thole who have a part with him in the legislative, from any andre execution of that power which might be at sempted in order to hreak through that independence, and join the legislative to the executive; or in other words, well both powers abfelutely, and without limitation in the prince. And this was the reafon of immumities, fo much tabled of, and to little underflood.

If it be faid, that thefe immunities operate also a gain't fellow fubjechs, from whom there can be no fuch Ser, and are forceines (perhaps too often) abuled to diffionell ends, the asfwer mult be fought for in the depravity of the human heart, which will pervert the beft inflictations to the worff purpoles, and make it neceffispy to preclude every acception, that it flould not be autended to ferre them. As far inflance, if the meaneft fableft of the flate had a right to claim the affiltance of the sivil power incomercies, against any member of the legislature, while in his legislative aspeaty, that right might be fuborated, or forced by the concutive power, in fuch a manner, as to overturn his findependency, and prevent his difference to him:

,

him: for which reason, it is better that an individual should fuffer (to suppose the work) than an opportunity be given for ruining the whole community : according to the known maxim, that an evil -(which affects but one), is preferable to an inconvenience (which affects many.) And this immenity, which is really the flield and fafety of the flate can never be invaded, but from a defign against the liberty of the flate, nor abiolutely given up, without giving up that liberty along with it; though the right may be waved in particularinflances, which appear unworthy of the benefit of it. To actions criminal in their own nature, between individuals, or immediately dangetous to the finte, it was never defigned to be extended, as in fuch cafes it wand have been destructive of the end for while it. mainfinited.

While my mafter was running riot in this extrinugent manner, fome things happened which raifed in his favous the indignation and pity of many who diffilted the many and diffapproved his proceedings, because they faw him perfocuted by unjuffifiable means.

It may well be imagined, that I did not remain long mough in his pollellion, to fee the conclusion of this as fair ; but as I had ample opportunity of being anquainted with it at the time, and fee that your eurisdity is interefled in the event, I will continue the account here, especially as the principal contractors in my next fervice, were connected with it in fo particular a manser, that it is necessary to explain one in order to undarihand the other. CHRYSAL: OR, THE

CHAP. VI.

CHEVENL'S mafter takes a foreign tour. Remarks mpon national reflections, and attacks upon private characters. CHEVENL's mafter is called to an account for certain improper liberties, by a very improper person, whom he treats with uncommon propriety: CHEVENL makes some out-of the way reflections on a question much canvassed to listle purpose.

WHEN my mafter had in four measure exhausted the first flow of his fipirits upon the recovery of his libere ty, he made a short encursion abroad, as if merely for anulement, but in reality to provide a place of retreaty in case of the worst, as his apprehensions could not but be alarmed, whenever he allowed himself time to thisks I have observed that in the account he gave my late master when he first told him of his attack upon the minister, he faid he had included in it all his countrymen. This he really had done on that, and continued to do, on all other occasions, with a licentious instanpled; but which left its force, and became contemptible, by finking into fourility.

Attacks upon private characters, unless forced by meetikty, or defigned to ferve good purpoles, fuch as perfonal reformation, or caution to others, are literally abule, and proceed always from a bad heart; but national reflections, as they can answer no good purpole of any kind, are abule in every fense, and proceed equally from folly and malevolence. A folly indeed that is often punished by fools, who take to themfelves that abule.

160

ADVENTURES of a GUINEA. 187 abufe, which belongs not to them in particular, and would pais by without lighting upon them, if not ap _ plied thus by themfelves.

My mafter had not been long abroad, when a countryman of the ministers thought proper to call him to account for the liberties he had taken with his country. The abfurdity of fuch a flep in any man was flill ag. gravated by the peculiar circumftances of this perfor. who had actually given weight to the leverest part of the charge against his country, (indeed the only part that would admit of weight, the reft being, as I have faid, nothing but fourrility) by engaging in the fervice of the enemies of its prefent government, and fighting their battles against it. Such an antagonist therefore was beneath the notice of any man of reafon, and accordingly was treated to by my mafter, who on this oc-cation behaved with a moral propriety and prudence, much above the tenor of his general character. But his enemies beheld his conduct in a different light, and attributed to cowardice what was really the effect of courage.

You feem furprized at my faying that his declining to fight was the effect of courage! but reflect a moment, and you will fee that it is the motive of fighting, and not the mere fighting that conflictutes true courage; and that the fashionable courage of venturing life for punctilius of imaginary honotor is real cowardice, as it proceeds folely from fear of the fashie cenfure of the world; and therefore, that to brave that confure in fuch cafes is the highest courage.

I would not be underflood by this to declare abfolately against a man's fighting in his own cause, in all cafes indificriminately. Different cloumflonces make an effectial difference in things which fuperficially appear to be alike. A man's venturing his life, as I have faid in vindicating empty punctilios of imaginary honour, or in support of injustice, is the highest and most ingrateful infult to the author of that life, who has made the prefervation of it the first principle of action, and confequently an indispensable duty, when it can be preferved without violation of those greater duties, which he has thought proper to preferibe.

0 3

- ...

But as there are other things more valuable than life, because without them life would lose its value, reason, which is the voice of heaven, permits to hazard the lefser good for the prefervation of the greater, and this is the justification of war between different states.

To prevent the evils which fuch a recourfe between individuals in the fame flate muft be attended with, laws are eftablifhed to preferve thole rights, and redrefs injuries, which they may offer to each other; to the laws therefore, it is an indifpenfible duty to recur for fuch redrefs and prefervation, where they are able to effect them: but this duty does not feem to extend to far as abfolutely and indifcriminately to preclude the other method of a man's firiving at the hazard of his life to effect them himfelf, when the laws cannot do it, as is too often the cafe, it being impoffible for human wildom to make provision for every occurrence, which in the complication and extensiveness of human action may require it.

An opinion, to contrary to that profefied by all, who have undertaken to difcufs this fubject, however confonant to the fenfe of mankind in general, as flewn in their practice, flould be fupported by the plainest and most convincing reafons.

A good

$62

•

ł

163

A good name is the immediate jewel of the foul; it is the first fruit and the reward of virtue: the prefervation of it therefore is indiputably worth hazarding life for, where the laws have not fufficiently provided for its defence; as is the case in many of the most delicate and tender points. If a man for instance is unjussily accused of a fact that ruins his good name, at the same time that the accusation comes not within the reach of any law from which he may receive redrefs, can reason fay, that he is not jussifiable in flriving for that redrefs him, felf, and vindicating his good name at the hazard of his life, when that life would be only milery without it ?

But here another difficulty occurs. Shall a man, it is faid, put himfelf upon a level with his injurer, and rifque a fecond injury, in feeking fatisfaction for the first? This certainly is an evil, but must be fubmitted to, to prevent a greater.

If a man were permitted to redrefs himfelf abfolutely without fuch a rifque, the confequence would be, that partiality to himfelf would make him think every thing that fhould difpleafe him an injury fufficient to merit fuch a redrefs, whereby murders would be multiplied to the reproach of humanity, and ruin of the flate. But where this rifque makes the redrefs attended with danger, people are cautious not to run into it, but on what they at leaft think good grounds.

Befide riquing life in an even fcale is in fome manner flaking it upon the juffice of the caufe, and appealing to heaven for decifion; and confequently fuccefs clears the character in general eltimation; whereas killing infidioufly, or without equal rifque, only conferns the first charge, on a prefumption of conficious field, and

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

164

and aggravates it with the weight of new guilt. And this was the fenfe of mankind, till the femedy was perverted to fuch an excels as to become worfe than the evil, and therefore necellary to be abolifhed, as far as human laws can abolifh a general principle of action-

One particular though in the laws made to abolith it deferves remark; as it flews a firking inflance of the fagacity with which human laws are often made. Killing a man, in a deliberate duel, be the caufe ever fo import unt, and utterly unprovided for in the law, is accounted murder, and made capitally criminal; but killing in a drunken broil, or ungoverned guft of paffion, is only a pardonable offence, and called by the fofter name of man-flaughter ! Now if the makers of that law had but confidered which action proceeded from the worft caufe, and was liable to be attended with the worft configuences, from the poffible frequency of it, they might perhaps have free reafon to reverfe the cafe, and made the latter capital, and the former at leaft pardonable.

In a word, he who takes away the life of another, or loits his own, in a trivial or unjuft caule, or where the have of his country have provided him redrefs, is guilty of murder; whereas he who kills, or is killed in a caule of real importance, for which there is no remedy provided him by the law, fins not against the fibrit of that law, however he may against the letter; and confequently feems to be institled to an immunity from the penalties of it. This reafoning though refpects only the reafon of the law, and is by no means half down as a rule for practice; it being the indifferentable duty of a fibject to obey the plain letter of the law, without prefuming to oppole his private opinion to it, otherwife than by humble application to proper anthority to have it altered.

CHAP. VII.

CHRYSAL'S master's late conduct draws bim into a new scrape, in which he comes off but second beft. He takes advantage of his misfortune, to make his escape from a greater. He suffers the resonances of his enemies, as fat as they can reach him, and meets from his friends the fate of all useles tools, after having served them with improbable success. A friking instance of the advantage of an upright judge, and equal laws. CHRYSAL obsinges his fervice.

THE opinion, that my mafter's having behaved in this manner proceeded from a want of fpirit, foon laid him under a neceffity of fhewing the contrary. A perfon who was involved deeper than he chofe to appear, in his accufations against the minister, though he was known to be his creature, though the might fafely invalidate the credit of the charge, and curry farther favour with his patron, by denying it in terms of fuch abufe as should make the accufer infamous, on fubmitting to them as he imagined he would.

But in this he found himself miflaken. The captioufnels of falle honour, that often paffes for true refolution, which is only the refult of virtue, was now piqued; and two beings (for it was impossible for the other to draw back) who called themselves rational, hazarded their lives in support of what neither could have supported by reason.

The

16¢

٤

CHRYSAL: On THE

The event proved immediately upfavourable to my master, who received a wound, that for some time seemed to threaten his life. But he foon thought the danger amply made amends for, by the pretence it gave him to put off from time to time the refertment of that part of the legillature to which he belonged, for the offence which had occasioned his being confined, and at length to by from it, when he found it could not be any longer prevented by fach finefics, from burfting on his head. Such a flight was an implicit acknowledgment of his guilt. He was therefore deprived of his part in the legiflature, and confequently of all the immunities anmexed to it, and given up to the common course of the laws, for that and other mattern, whenever he fhould be found within the reach of their power. Nor was this all ! to fhew still stronger disapprobation of his conduct, the breach of those immunities, upon which the magistrate had founded his discharge from confinement. was overlooked, and fuely offences as his excluded from their protection for the future.

You cannot be farprifed at his meeting fuch a fate. The tools of a flatelman, however fuccefsful they may have been, are always thrown abde with neglect, ine moment they have done their work; but when they fail, however blamelefsly, or run into any error, though only from excels of zeal, the weight of the neglect is made fill heavier, by heaping all the blame upon them. But what will you think, when I tell you, that unequal as he must appear to have been to fuch an attempt, in confequence, character and abilities, he railed to threatening a florm, that the minister thought proper to retire out of its way; as all his friends apprehended they should have been obliged to follow him; a fuccefs, far which which he was in a great measure indebted to the affilance of my late mafter, who represented their private characters in fuch colours, in his fatirical writings, aswill make their memories pay a dear price for their power, the postical merits of his works, in which their names are branded with indelible infanty, enfuring their immortality. Such is the balis upon which flatefinen found their greatnefs; and fo eafily is a jealous populace led away, by any thing that flatters their prefent hemour.

Digitized by Google

I fay not this, as deciding upon the merits of the difputes in which he was concerned. I think too meanly of human politicks in general, to give my opinion in favour of any one feheme of them, in preference to another. They are all alike a jumble of villainy, and blundens. All I intend is, to fhew on what a fandy foundation men who value themfelves upon their wifdom, wear out their lives in anxious toils and dangers, to build their hopes; and what unworthy means are often made use of to overturn them, and work ends, moputed great, on purpose perhaps to humble man in his own eyes.

As for my mafter, he was no fooner removed out of the light of the mob, whole idol he had been in fuch an extravagant degree, than he was entirely out of their mind, and the form he had raifed fublided fo tomaly, as to leave no other trace behind it but his ruin.

I have observed your anxiety, to know whether he ever obtained redress for the injustice done him in his property; and the injurious treatment he second when he was first apprehended, as I faid that the fellows senployed to take him, had under the fanction of authority committed all, the outrages of lawless ruffians. The ingterest terefl you take in the caufe of fuch a man, can whit from nothing but your love of juffice, which should not be violated in the perfon of the most unjust. It will therefore give you pleafure to be informed, that the laws of your country never shone with brighter lustre, than in this instance.

Digitized by Google

In defpite of every artifice and effort which power and chicane could make use of to evade, or intimidate from the execution of them, (a striking instance of the latter of which was depriving his patron of every degree of power and honour, of which he could be deprived without regard to his great fervices and personal confequence, only for appearing in his cause) an able and upright magistrate supported them with such refosuring and judgment, that he obtained exemplary redrefs for all he had suffered that could be redressed, as did several others who had been involved in the same circumstances, as having been employed by him.

In gratification to your curiofity, I have thus given you the general heads of his flory. To have dwelt on the minuter circumstances, however curious in themfelves, would have led me too great a length, befide that they come not within my defign, as I was not directly in his peficifion when they happened. To rereturn therefore now to the regular chain of my own adventures, I muft go back to the time of my leaving his fervice, which was not very long after he had been releafed from his confinement.

Among the crouds that eame to congratulate him upon this event, was a clergyman, whole profeffions of perfonal attachment, and refpect for his principles and abilities, were firained to fuch a fulfome height, as would have difgufted vanity itfelf.

Digitized by Google

3

My

168

My mafter faw through him directly, and played him off with humour peculiar to himfelf, till he concluded with telling him, that he had a work then in hand, upon the fame fcheme with his, which he intended to publish by fubscription.

My mafter, who knew the man, took the hint, in the proper light of a modelt way of begging, and clapped a couple of guineas into his hand, defiring to be inferted in his lift, upon which occasion I left his fervice.

CHAP. VIII.

Reason of the joy with which CHRYSAL was received by his new master. Account of a curious, though not uncommon way of getting a living. Conversation between CHRYSAL's master and bis guest. They compare notes on their different attempts in the literary trade. CHRYSAL's master is encouraged by bis friend from bis own example. A remarkable account of a certain matter, that made much noise.

THE joy my new master felt on the receipt of fo fmall a fum, fnewed the confequence it was of to him. He thanked his benefactor in terms of rapture, and vowing eternal gratitude and attachment to him, and his cause, departed with an happy heart. Nor was his joy without caule. He had invited an acquaintance to fup and fpend the evening with him, and had neither money nor credit to provide any thing for his entertainment.

Defpicable as the vanity of making invitations in fuch circumftances may appear to you, it was one of his

VOL. IV.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

his chief refources, to fupport himfelf and his family; as he never invited any, but fuch as he expected to borrow much more from than it coll him to entertain them.

Your indignation at the mention of fo mean a fhift, fhews your happy ignorance of the ways of this populous place, in which there are numbers who keep up a decency of external appearance, and fupport life only by this method of railing contributions on their acquaintances, fpending with one, what they have got from another, in order to get from him too, and fo on; with this difference only from common beggars, that they feldom apply to the fame perfon twice, and inflited of praying for their benefactors with an appearance of gratitude, wherever they meet them, avoid their company, and are always feeking for new acquaintances, as quarry for them to prey upon.

On this errand he had fallied out this morning, but met with fuch bad fuccefs, that he had been obliged to liave recourfe to the fublicription fehrme, an addition which he had lately made to his former plan. His joy therefore at my late mafter's generofity was but natural. He returned home in high fpirits, and giving his wife half his prize to provide two or three nice little things, fecured me for future contingencies.

Every thing being thus adjulted, his gueft, who came punctually at the appointed time, was received with all the formalities and airs of politenels of high life. The convertation before, and at fupper, ran on the ufinal topios of the weather, politicks, and the fecret hiftory of the day; but when my mafter's lady had withdrawa, and he faw his friend began to palate his wine with pleafare, (for he never made his path, till the heart was marm) he took occasion from some modelt mention the other made of his munificence in the relief of merit in difirefs, to lament his own inability to indulge that darling pleasure of his foul, as a proper introduction to his busines.

www.)

171

I have wondered with much concern (anfwered his friend) at your languishing to long in this obscurity. It is all your own fault. Why do you not exert your-felf! There is nothing which fpirit and diligence cannot conquer."---

" Very true, my dearest friend !' (replied my master with a florug of his fhoulders, and an heavy figh) ' But what can diligence or abilities either do, when they cannot find employment. I have offered myfelf to miniftry and opposition, to bookfellers and news-writers, and all to no purpose: though indeed if it was not for the affiftance of one of the latter, who now and then takes an effay, or a letter from me, I should be utterly at a lofs. So that what can I do !----

"What! why any thing rather than be idle. If one thing won't do, another may. There is not an article in the trade, which I have not tried in my time, I made bibles, magazines, and reviews; fermons, ballads, and dying speeches; and though all failed, I never loft my fpirit. The mifearriage of one scheme only fet my invention at work to firike out another. No man can have greater difficulties to ftruggle with, than I had : and yet you fee I have got over them all."-----

'Yes! but my dearest friend, you had advantages! the countenance and affiftance of fuch a patron as your's.'- --- •

"Were just as great advantages to me, as your patron's are to you ; and no more. I had the honourable advan-

P 2

172

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

advantage of leading a bear, for a bit of bread; and betraving his fecrets to his father and mother, for the hope of a church-living, which I fhould not have got at laft: but that it was not worth felling."----

'You aftonish me! Don't you owe all your preferments, all your affluence, to the interest of your par tron.'----

What I owe my preferments to is not neceffary to mention; but my affluence I owe to a very different caufe. The detection of that impostor was the thing that made my fortune, I might have remained in my original poverty to this day, if it had not been for that '----

'For that ! Is it poffible ! I cannot conceive that the profits upon the fale of a pamphlet or two, (and that not a very extensive fale neither) could do fuch great things. My novel, I thought, bade as fair for a good run as any thing: it was feafoned high to the talle of the times, and yet it did very little more than pay.'----

The fale! Hah! hah! hah! No, no! I did not depend upon that. My profit came in another way entirely.'----

What can be your meaning! If it be not too great a fecret, I should be much obliged to you to explain this matter. It may possibly be of fervice to me.

Why, on that account, and as I think I can dopend upon your honour, I don't much care if I do If you are fo much furprized at my faying that I made my fortune by that pamphlet, what will you think when I tell you farther, that I never wrote one line of it, nor was I any more concerned in the fale than you, who knew nothing of the matter? But not to perplex vou you with gueffing at what it is impeffible you fhould over difcover! You can be so ftranger to the noile that impostor made when he first came there. While he did. no more than tell his own flory, it was thought by his old fraternity to be the best way not to give it confen quence by contradicting it, but let it die away of itfelf: belides, that poffibly it might not have been to easy to contradict it to any effect, while the perfons concerned were all living, and the facts fresh in every one's memory. But when he went fo far as to attack the whole body, and was evidently undermining the foundation upon which they flood, by tearing off the veil of antiquity behind which they hid themselves, and exposing all their myslery to light, the matter became more ferious, and it was judged necelfary to ruin his character in order to invalidate the credit of his work, the merie of which made a direct attack not only difficult, but alfo too doubtful of fuecels to hazard an affair of fuch importance upon it.

173

For this reafon heaven and hell were conjured un. and every engine fet at work to prove his flory of himfelf false in every particular, and make him appear the most complicated villain that ever existed. But the credit of those who made this attack upon him, was too low for it to have any effect, as their principles, and the interested motives upon which they proceeded, were fufficiently known ; fo that it only did him fervice, by thewing his confequence.

. While they were confidering how to repair this defeat, necellity suggested to me the lucky thought of offoring them my affiftance. I had already got fome degree of credit by anticipating time in the detection of two filly impostures, the absurdity of which would foon ' have have diffeowered them without my help. This gave weight to my offer: accordingly, they readily embraord it; and defiring only the fanction of my name, (for which you may judge I was well paid) took all the trouble upon themfelves.

P 3

٠,

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

'The reafons which defeated them, affilted me. Every thing I was thought to fay carried weight, as appearing to proceed from the higheft candour and attachment to truth, as nothing elfe could naturally be fuppoied to have made me take fuch pains to detect an imposure, fo favourable to the principles I profefied myfelf. The public alfo had got enough of his ftory, and was ready to liften to one againft him. The confequence you know. His character was ruined with the public; and of courfe a prejudice raifed againft his work, which ruined that alfo, without the trouble of a regular confutation, which as I observed before, might not have been an eafy matter : and now I hope the myftery is explained to you.'--

CHAP IX.

CHRYSAL'S maßer makes fome fitiking remarks on bis friend's account of this myfterious transaction, and draws inferences from it, not commonly attended to. He entertains bis friend with a curious fong, who makes an important bit, just in bis own character, upon it. CHRYSAL'S master boggles a little at first, at bis friend's propolal, but is encouraged by bis example to undertake it.

" I AM much obliged to you, for fuch a proof of your confidence, (returned my mafter) particularly as it clears the forme points to me, which I own gave me equal concern and furprife; and of which delicacy prevented my defiring an explanation from you. These were the manner in which that attack was made upon him, and the arguments and proofs brought in fupport of it, which were fo unfair, inconclusive, and in many inflances contradictory, that I was aftonifhed any man of fenfe and honefty could make use of, or be influenced by them.<sup>3</sup>

"Why, that is very true. Their zeal often overfhot the mark to be fure. But that fignified nothing. Set the public once upon the fcent of fcandal; and they'll hunt it like blood-hounds, through thiek and thin. Nothing can be fo grofs as to ftop them. You may as well whiftle to the wind to change its courfe, as fpeak reafon to the people, when they have conceived a prejudice......

<sup>6</sup> But what is your opinion of that affair? Is he, or is he not, the impostor they would make him? For I confess, the arguments by which they would prove him one, are so far from answering their delign with me, that I think they prove the contrary, by proving nothing; as it is natural to conclude, that if there were any better, such would not have been made use of. But you certainly must have had fufficient opportunities of being informed, in the intercourse you necessarily had with them.<sup>2</sup>---

'As to that I know no more of the matter than you do, nor ever gave myfelf the trouble to enquire. All the intercourfe I had with them, was only to fave appearances, and get my money. Whether he was an impoflor or not, was the fame thing to me, I was paid for

ferming

173

CHRYSAL: OR, YHR

feening to prove him one; and that was all I caved for.

196

'But you continue to call him one fail. Do they alfo pay you for that now?.....

'No. I do that for my own credit. Were I to retract, all the fcandal that has been heaped upon him in my name, would revert upon myfelf, fo that whenever I mention him, I am obliged to do it in the old phrafe. I know fome fqueamifh people would have fcrupled the whole; but that is not my way of thinking. I held nothing to be fo great a reproach as poverty, nor any thing a fin that can get over it. And fo here's my fervice to you. I wifh you could hit upon fuch another opportunity.'

And if I would foruple to make use of it, may I perish in my present poverty; and I defy the devil to find an heavier curfe.

The conversation then turned to more general topics. in the course of which, my late maîter naturally coming to be mentioned, ' That's right (faid my mafter) I have fomething to thew you that will give you pleafure You may remember I told you, that I am fometimes obliged to a printer of my acquaintance for helping me to a job, in the letter or effay way. Happening to call upon him this morning, to try if he could take any thing from me, he shewed me this, (pulling a piece of greafy paper out of his pocket) which I think really a curiofity. It is a proof of a bawdy-fong, which the gentleman we have been talking of wrote, and had a few copies of it printed for the amufement of his particular intimates. My friend got it from one of his journeymen, who fometimes works for that gentleman, and fays there are a good many more of them, which are ADVENTURES of a GUINEA. 177 are all printed together in a ballad. You'll find it worth your reading. Nothing ever was fo highly worked up. It gave me ineffable pleafure.? ٠.

• If you can prove this to be wrote by that perfon (faid the other fpitting, and riggling in his chair, after having pored over it for fome time) your fortune is made ! you know his enemies are firving to run him down by any means. Now this will give them fo plaufible an handle againft him, that they will not fail to reward you liberally for the difcovery. All you have to do, is to prove it plainly upon him.

'I am pretty fure that may be done; (anfwered . my mafter with fome hefitation) But 1--1--I hardly know how----I am under perfonal obligation.

'Nay, if vou let fuch things as that interfere, I give you up. What fignifies pass obligation, when put in competition with prefent interest? You know what my old antagonist fays, that it is a rule among his former fraternity never to let any focial or moral duties interfere with religion, of which he gives a remarkable inflance in his own flory. Now my interest is my religion; and every thing which interferes with that I abjure; as I have sufficiently proved. But I beg pardon, I would by no means prefs you to do any thing against your conficience, if it is so tender.

"Wrong me not, my dearch friend, by fuen an opinion; my conficience is as far from being tender, as your's can be. I was only furprized, that I had not myfelf feen what you mentioned. But now that your friendship has pointed it out to me, you shall fee me pursue it as eagerly as you can defire. All I want is your direction ! Leave the rest to me.'

The remainder of the evening was fpent in confultation Sion upon the plan proper to be purfeed, the forming of which my mafter followitted implicitly to the superior judgment and experience of his friend, who was to pleafed with this mark of his refpect, and to fure of fuccess, that on going away, he took a modelt hint, and lent him five guineas, reminding him at the fame time of the confidence he had placed in his honour, by difcloting his affairs to him, and enjoining him to fecrecy.

СНАР. Х.

CREATEL'S mafter purfues bis febene, and violates moral bonefty to ferve the caufe of virtue and religion. He waits upon his patron, who bonefly refufes a character, to which he knows he has no night; but undertakes the affair from a more prevailing motive, in which he is remarkably affifted by another perfon, of lefs modefly, who pleads the caufe of religion and virtue in vain, till bonour at length turns the feate in their favour. CHEYSAL'S mafter is difappointed of his hopes, and makes ufe of an expedient in character, to efcape from the just reward of all his labours. CHEYSAL changes his fervice.

NOT to lose a moment's time, in a matter of fuch importance, my malker went next morning to his worthy friend the printer, to whom he opened his feheme; and by his influence with the affiftance of a bribe, and promifies of much more, he prevailed on the fellow from whom the former paper was got, to betray the truft of his employer, and first the whole ballad.

The next thing was to make his honelt acquisition known known to those from whom he expected the reward of his pious pains. For this purpose he waited upon his patron, and maving with difficult y gained accels to him, on repeated mellages of imp ortant business, after the common cant of compliments, 'I am come, Sir, faid he, on an errand, that I know must be agreeable to you, as it will afford a fignal opportunity of shewing your regard for religion and virtue.'

'Heh! (aniwered his patron) My regard for religion and virtue! What the devil does the fellow mean? What regard have I ever fhewn for either in word or action, that fhould put fuch a thought in your head? If you are come to preach to me, you shall foon find the effects of your piety.

*Pardon me, Sir; I know you better than to be guilty of fuch prefumption! What I mean is this. Fortune has favoured me with an opportunity of putting it into your power to establish fuch a character; and as I know most people are fond of the name, when it can be obtained without the trouble of the practice, I thought it my duty to acquaint you with it; especially as it will enable you, at the fante time, to do a particular pleafure to your friends in power.<sup>9</sup>

Why, there may be fomething in that, as you fay; but for the reft, I care as little for the name, as I do for the practice; and would not give myfelf a moment's trouble to get it; fo be quick, and let me hear what you have got to fay. I have a match to ride tomorrow against a gentleman for a confiderable wager, and must fee his groom this morning, in order to fettle matters with him; beside which, I have an affignation with his wife, who expects me at this very time, fo that that I have not a moment, to lofe about religion and virtue.'

- A - A - A - A - A - A

مئر

My maßer, who knew him too well to attempt interfering with fuch engagements, politely wifhed him fuccels, and then gave him in few words, an account of the whole affair, only referving to himfelf the honour of the thought, with which his patron was fo pleafed, that he promifed to give him all the affiftance in his power, if it was only for the fun of the thing.

Accordingly, as foon as he could fipare time, from his own weightier concerns, he mentioned the matter to those more immediately concerned in it, who embraced the project eagerly, and rewarded my master with most liberal promises for his pains, of which they resolved to take advantage, in order to crush a person, either hated or feared by every one among them.

In the attack made upon him for this purpole, the principal part was undertaken by one, whole regard for religion and virtue was heightened by a motive not the , most consistent with either. This was the perfon who had been competitor with the culprit for the higher order of the MOCK-MONASTERY. In the account I gave you of that curious transaction. I observed that he cherifhed a feeret grudge against the other, which was aggravated to violently by the differed on that eccation, that he had prevailed to have him expelked the fociety *. Such an opportunity therefore as this, of completing his revenge, was not to be mifled by one of his principles. Accordingly, though at the fight of the ballad he knew it to be no more than a collection of the fongs, which he had himfelf often bore a part in finging at the monastery, and fome of the

* Vol. III.

2

worft

worft of which he had boafted of being the author of, he inveighed against it with all the fervency and enthufiastic acal of a modern fanatick, and displayed the danger of letting such an infult, upon every thing held facred, go unpunished, in such strong and affecting colours, as afforded high entertainment to all who heard him, and were acquainted with his life.

But all his eloquence would have proved ineffectual to make fuch of his fraternity as were not, like him, flimulated by private motives, give the lie to their own practice, in fo flagrant a manner as to cenfure the theory of it, had not fome particular expressions happened to affect the honour of one of them, whom all the reft of course elpouled; and thus for once, honour turned the scale in favour of virtue and religion. too light by themselves; and the ballad was condemned, as tending to debauch the principles of the people, though it was sufficiently known that it was not defigned for publication, nor would ever have been heard of, had not this attack raufed a curiofity about it.

Through the whole of this important transaction, may maker performed his part most cleverly, flopping at nothing that was thought any way neceffary to bring it to effect. As foon therefore as it was concluded, he prepared to receive the reward of his labour, the engoyment of which he had anticipated in imagination in every flape it could be given.

But it was not long before he found his hopes had been too fanguine. Inflead of being rewarded immediately, as he had been made to expect, the job was fcarce done when he could perceive the limites of fawour grow cooler upon him, as often as he went to pay his court to his patrons, in order to keep them in mind

0

-Ver. IV.

of

TR2 CHRYSAL: OR, THE

of their promifes. A flate of fuch uncertainty, fevere enough upon any, was not to be borne by one in his circumflances. The expectations he had raifed in the height of his hopes, had opened the mouths of all his creditors upon him, with an importunity not to be quieted; belide, that he had embezzled fome public money intrufted to him, a demand for which he expected every day, and knew he could not fhift off for a moment.

Driven almost to distraction by such irrelistible neceffity, he had no refource but to throw himfelf at the feet of the perion who had appeared most fanguine in the purfuit of his feheme, and confequently been most liberal of his promifes to him, and implore his affistance to extricate him from his accumulated distreffes. But they who will most readily avail themselves of villainy, always detes the villain. All the return he received, was a cold profession of concern; and a shameles excuse of wanting that power to relieve him, which the caitiff suppliant well knew he had.

A new misfortune often lightens the weight of thole under which the mind was finking before, by rouzing it from liftlefs dejection, to an exertion of its powers. Such a difappointment of his only hope fhewed him all the horrors of his fituation; and made him inftantly caft about how to efcape from what he found he could not redrefs: inftead therefore of betraying it, by his looks, which he knew were watched, he affumed an air of uncommon fpirits, and telling every one that he had got a politive affurance of receiving the promifed reward without any farther delay, he went to one of his tradefmen, by that time he thought the news might have reached him, and taking up goods to a confiderable able amount, for which he confidently engaged to pay at a fixed and fhort day, no fooner got them into his posseficition, than he fold them privately at half price, and packing up whatever he could carry with him, fied beyond the reach of his creditors; and fo proved how far his late conduct had proceeded, as he profetfied, from his high regard to moral virtue and religion.

The agitation and horrors of his mind, from the time he had refolved upon flight, till he had effected it, may be eafily conceived. Whether the prefent fafety it procured him gave him any lafting relief, I had not an opportunity of feeing, as I quitted his fervice at the ine, where he took a post-chaife to get off; though it is most probable, that after the first hurry of his spirits fublided a fense of the various viblainies, by which he had brought himfelf to fuch a state of exile, indittered the very bleffing of liberty, and kept his mind in flavery, though nis body was free.

CI'EP.

182

Digitized by GOOgle

CHRYSAL: QE, THE

184

CHAP. XI.

CHEVERL again changes bis fervice. His new mafter is obliged to pay expedition-fees, to get over artificial delays. He and his miftrefs fet out on a long journey, to do what might have been better done at home. CHEVERL makes fome interefling reflections on a most important fubject. Story of (HEVERL'S mafter. CHEVERL continues his reflections on the fame fubject, which he confiders in a farther and most affecting point of view. CHEV-SAL changes his fervice.

MY late mafter had fearer decamped, when a young gentleman came to the inn, and ordering a chaife and four to be got ready with the utmoft expedition, gave my new mafter a bank-note to pay for it, in the change of which he received me.

The anxiety which my new mafter expressed to have the grooms make hafte, was a fufficient reason for them to practife every delay they could devise, in order to extort expedition-fees, at which they were fo expert, that he was forced to give them almost as much as he paid for the chaife, before he could get it to fir.

When at length every thing was fettled, he directed them to a particular place, where an hackney-coach waited for him, out of which he received a young lady, with a couple of finall bundles, and then bade the pofilions drive on; but they had no fooner got out of the town, than he changed his orders, and directed them to take another road. This occationed a new delay. The fellows alledged their being obliged to go where where their mafter had ordered them, and no where effe; and made fo many difficulties, that, as they expected, my mafter was compelled to purchase their compliance at their own price.

Digitized by GOOGL

All obstacles being thus got over, he turned to the young lady, who fat trembling, and panting by his fide, and embracing her tenderly, 'Now, my dearess love, (faid he) all our fears are over. Should we be even traced to the inn, this turn will effectually baffle all purfuit.<sup>2</sup>

'I wish it may,' (answered she) ' but I shall never think myself fafe, till I am absolutely out of their reach, and all is over.'

The converfation of lovers is agreeable only to themfelves! The reft of their's for two days, as they flew rather than travelled (for which expedition they paid fufficiently, every fet of poliilions giving the word to the next) will not bear repetition. As foon as they got to the end of their journey, they put an end to their most immediate fears also, by a marriage, which might have been performed with a much greater probability of fuccess at home, had not a positive law prezented it.

I fee your furprize at my faying that a politive law prevented marriage, as the profperity of the community depends in the first degree on the promotion of that flate. But fo it happens in human affairs, that the true interest of the people is not always the first object of the laws made for their government.

Though too general experience confirms this remark, it is neceflary to explain the particular circumstance that gives occasion to it in this instance.

The first end of marriage is the propagation of the Q_3 fpecies.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

196

fpecies, in the manner molt agreeable to reafon, and likely to produce the happinels of the parties, as well as the population of the flate. As the paffions, which lead to this end, are ftrongeft before reafon has acquired ftrength to direct them, it is neceffary that they flould be fubject to the direction of others who may be better qualified to difeern and promote their intereft. This right of direction naturally belongs to those who are most intimately concerned in that intereft, as affecting a part of themfelves; and hence, among every people upon the earth, however differing in other respects and customs, this right of directing the matrimonial choice has always belonged to the parents; till maturity of age may be prefamed to ripen judgment, and fo remove the neceffity upon which it is founded.

But however evident this right is, the paffions of youth to often rebel against it, that it was found neceffary to enforce it by express laws. These laws though the professed end of which is to make marriage happy, should never be perverted to the unfatural purpole of preventing it entirely, by clogging it with fuch unneceffary and unrealogable refirictions, as tend to subjugate not only natural liberty, but also the highest interest of the flate, which depends upon population, to avarice, caprice, or pride of family in parents; or to views of interest in those appointed to supply, their place.

The particular cafe of my mafter, which gave occafion to thele reflections, was this. He was the younger fon of a noble family, to the honours of which his rifing virtues promified to add new luftre. Youthful inclination had first attached him to this lady, whole merits upon acquaintance confirmed that attachment, more than her very large feiture. Such a maringe could toold not fail to meet the approbation of reafon and paternal prudence. Accordingly every neceffary preliminary was agreed upon, when the fudden death of her father threw in large obflacles which threatened to prevent it, at leaft for a longer time than youthful impatience could bear. For, as he had not actually figned to his confent, those to whom the care of his daughter devolved, thought proper to exert the right which the law gave them of objecting to the difparity between her fortune and that of her lover, and fa break off a match evidently for their mutual advantage.

When the lovers found that all they could do to influence their compliance was ineffectual, they had recourfe to this expedient (which the fage makers of the law had, perhaps indvertently, left open) to evade it, by flying beyond its power; and there folemnized a marriage, which flowld be valid at their return home, though entered into without any of the prudential cautions for fecuring happinels, which are cultomary on fach occafions, and he had in vain offered to come in to; fo that the law, which was profeffedly defigned to prevent inconfiderate and unhappy marriages, in its affect deprived this, and the many marriages of the kind, of the means for procuring happinels, which former laws, founded on reason, had provided for thems.

It is not to be denied, but the evils, which were immediately. alledged as the socafion of this law, called aloud for remedy; but whether the remedy provided: by it did not introduce an inconvenience of worfe confequence to the public than those evils, is not fo clear scafe. Whatever refirictions might have been thought meethary, in worldly wilden, to prevent feoret marriages.

Digitized by GOOgle

risges, by which either the honours of families might be fuppoled to fuffer diminution, or their fortunes fall a prey to mercenary defign, where these confiderations interfere not, such refluictions should never, in good policy, extend.

On the contrary, every impediment and "delay, not immediately proceeding from moral necessity, should be removed; and the flate of matrimony encouraged by fuch honours and advantages as fhould counterbafance the inconveniencies of it, to perfons labouring under circumftances of indigence ; by which means the inferior ranks of the people, whole numbers make the firength of a thate, would be delivered from the difficulties and fears which at prefent deter them from entering into matrimony, to the heavy lofs of the community, and the immediate ruin of fuch numbers of both fexes, whole natural paffions, debarred from this, their only proper refource, lead them into fuch vices as defeat the end of their creation, and make them a reproach to humanity. How many infants would daily be faved from the most unnatural murder, to the ornament and advantage of their country, could the wretched parents have faved their own fhame by marriage? How many females, who offer themfelves in the highways to brutal profitution, perifhing with cold, hunger, and difeafe, might have been the happy mothers of many children, and performed all the duties of their flation in virtuous effeem, had not their being hindered from marrying, by impediments made by law, betraved them to definiction ?

As foon as my mafter had thus accomplified the end of his journey, he fet out on his return to enjoy the fruits of it at home. But I continued not in his possible fion. polleffion, to see much of that mutual happines which his marriage promited, being borrowed from him on the road, by a gentleman of his acquaintance, who had been bubbled out of all his money at an horfe-race, and was now fighting his way to town, by running in debt at every inn, and raising contributions thus on all he met, of whom he had the least knowledge.

CHAP. XII.

CHRYSAL'S new master firihas out an adventure. He is fmitten with a given in a travelling-waggon, and changes his appearance to get admission to ber. Account of the company in the waggon. A good-natured mistake of one of the passengers gives occasion for a broil, which is put an end to by an accident that does not mend the master.

DISTRESSING as fach a fituation would have been to another, cuftom had made it fo familiar to my new mafter, that he thought nothing of it, but travelled on with his equipage, as unconcerned, and ready to engage in any mad freak, as if his pockets were full of money. Nor was he long without an opportunity of indulging his difposition.

As he was rolling carelefsly along, his chariot was flopped in a narrow part of the road, by one of those travelling waggons, whose unwieldy weight gives them the privilege of taking place of their betters. Such a circumflance naturally made the travellers in both carriages look out, when he was flruck with the uncommon beauty of a young creature in the waggon, whose charms in the first opening of their bloom gave fcope to imagination. imagination to paint a profpect if poslible beyond ther prefent perfection.

ÌTOC .

ţ,

Such a temptation could fearce be refifted by one who had reafoned his paffions into the beft fubjection, much lefs by him who blindly obeyed them in, or rather fimulated them to their utmost excers. He no fooner faw, therefore, than he refolved to have her by any means. The first thing to be done, for this pious purpole, was to change his appearance, in order to get into her company, as the least fuspicion of his rank would directly blow his defign. But this was no difficulty. He was well accustomed to lay it down; and the meanest character in life fat as naturally upon him as his own.

Accordingly as foon as his chariot patied the waggon, he drove on furiously, till he was out of fight, when he alighted, and changing cloaths with one of his fervants out of livery, ordered them to leave the great road, and wait for him at an inh, fome miles diffant acrofs the country.

Thus equipped for his enterprize, he walked on lefurely, like a common traveller, till he was overtaken by the waggon, the driver of which plied him in the ufual way to take a place, which after forme affected difficulties he agreed to. But the greateft difficulty arofe not from him. The waggon was already to full, that when the driver mentioned taking in another, the paffengers all cried out againft it with one voice. But his authority was too abfolute to be refined. He fixed his ladder, and ordered them to make room, barely conder fcending to fay that it was for a gentleman, who had been taken fuddenly ill, and wanted to go only to the "Agent village. This circumflance, though treated with brutal bratal difregard by the reft, had an immediate effect upon the tender difpolition of his defined prey, who fqueezed clofer to her mother, he crept into his neft, and fettled himfelf as conveniently as he could next to her in the ftraw.

191 .

The company into which he had thus thrust himfelf, feemed to be a representative of all the heteroclite characters of the age. Befide the young female, whofe appearance had attracted him, and her mother, a plain good-looking woman, it confisted of a mountebankdoctor and his zany, a methodist preacher, a freelling actor and actrefs, a fat ale-wife, a fervant-maid, who was going to London to repair a cracked reputation, a recruiting ferjeant, and two recruits, an outlaw'd fmuggler, and a broken excifeman.

Though my mafter could not at first view diffinguish all their different characters, fome of them were so ftrongly marked, that he promised himself the highest entertainment from the classing which he concluded must inevitably arise in fuch a group, and was resolved to promote, upon the first occasion. But an accident foon gave him that pleasure, without the trouble of planning for it.

As the weather was warm, and few of the company could be fulpected of the delicacy of changing their cloaths often, it may be fuppoled that every favour which arole among them was not purely aromatic. My mafter had not been many minutes in his place, when the various odours fuming round hun, had fuch an effect upon his fenfes, that he undefignedly breathed a with for a bottle of fpirits.

As he had been introduced under the pretence of being fick<sub>r</sub>-the ale-wife, who happened to be near him is mifter millook his meaning, and thought he wanted a dram, not once dreaming of any other use of fpirits. Pulling out a flash therefore from under her coat, in the height of good-nature, 'Spirits! (faid fhe) they are poissons stuff. Here is what will do you more good by half!" Then drawing the cork, and taking a fup, to shew him that it was not poison, 'Drink fome of this, (continued the, reaching him the flash) and I'll warrant it will settle you. It is right Hollands.'

Before my mafter had time either to accept or refue har offer, the actor, who fat between them, finoaked her miflake, and intercepting the bottle, as the reached across him, cried out in triumph, Bravo, my queen ! your gin from Holland pure,.

" My ftomach fooner than his head will cure."---

Then taking a large go down, or two, 'Here, Belvidera, (added he, giving the bottle to the actrefs) in this friendly cup, drown all your forrows !-- Drink as you love me, deep.'

His faithful mate could not difobey fuch a command. She took the bottle, and lifting it to her head, "Thus to the bottom (faid fhe) though it were a mile?"

But fhe was interrupted in her intention by the finuggler, who lay at her feet, and no fooner finelled the dear liquor, than he railed his head, and perceiving what fhe was about, 'Avalt haling there, (cried he, finatching the bottle from her mouth) or you'll pump the foupper dry.' And then going to put it to his own, 'Hold, (faid the excifeman, catching his hand with the fame defign) I feize this in the king's name, till I know whether it has paid duty.'

The mention of the word duty, fet the finuggler's plood on fire. 'Buty! you thark! (faid he, grafping r the bottle faster, and catching him in return by the throat with the other hand) I'll feize you! damn my eyes and limbs! I'll pay you the duty, if you don't hoofe your hold this moment, you fooundrel! that I will.'

Though he gripped the excifeman's throat fo hard, that he could not return his compliment in words, he feorned to yield the prize without one effort. Giving a twift therefore with all his force to wreft it out of his antagonift's hand, though he could not fucceed, he prevailed fo far as to turn the mouth of the bottle downwards, by which means the contents were poured full in the face of the ferjeant, who lay fnoring on his back, with his mouth wide open.

Welcome as fuch a guest would have been in a proper manner, the intrulion thus unexpectedly was not fo agreeable. He flarted up half fufficated; and belching his dose full in the face of one of the recruits, <sup>6</sup> Blood anouns! fire! and fury! (fputtered he) what's the meaning of this?

Just as he faid this, one of the wheels of the waggon came into a deep hole, with fuch a plump, that though it did not abfolutely overfet, it tumbled all the paffengers on top of one another; and inflantly put a flop to the cries of the ale-wife, for the lofs of her liquor.

The foreams, oaths, and execrations of the whole company, on this occation, would have given my mafler the higheft delight, had he not been rather too nearly concerned to enjoy the fun, the fat ale-wife being thrown fo full upon him, that he was unable to flir, though almost fmothered, so that he could not help adding his cries to the concert.

Vol. 1V.

ι

193

CHAR XIII.

CHRYSAL'S master experiences fome comfortable confiquences from the obliging disposition of the way goner. He pursues his defign, by paying common civility to his mistrefs's mother. Conversation and behaviour of the company. CHRYSAL'S master, in the pursuit of his defign, meets an adventure that cools his passion, and reassembles the company, when they are all like to be at fault, till one of them luckily hits off the fcent.

WHEN the driver had get his waggon out of the hole, and leen that all was lafe about it, he came to know what was the matter with his paffengers; and having unpacked them, my mafter had the pleafure to hear the young woman propole to her mother to walk a little way, till fome, not the moft agreeable confequences of the late difafter, fhould blow off, to which the readily conferted, as he prepared to accompany them both for the fame reafon, and in order to have an opportunity of making an acquaintance, which he found he could not fo well do in the waggon.

But the waggoner was not in the humour to give them that indufgence. When they called to him to let them down, he answered furfily, that they had not above a couple of miles to their inn; and if he were to Rop thus every moment, he should not get in, in time, and so without any farther ceremony whipped on his horfes. This was a fevere difappointment to my mafter, who foon grew so lick, that he could not hold up his head all the reft of the way.

· Digitized by Google

But

But the qualms of his flomach did not affect his confcience, fo as to make him in the leafl alter his delign. On his arrival at the inn, he made a pretence of the compafiion which the young girl and her mother had expressed for him, to attach himfelf particularly to them, and ply them with wine, by way of return, which false modelty made the mother take fo freely, as gave him good hopes of fuccels.

The conversation and behaviour at supper was frict-Iv in the character of the company. The methodiat made a long grace, and talk'd of religion and temperance, while he eat more than any two at the table, and his eyes were gloating at the forvant-maid, his fellow-traveller, who feemed to liften to him with great complacency and attention. The actor mimicked the methodilt to his face, and lolled out his tongue at every one elfe, as they happened to look another way. The actrels fpoke in heroics, and turned up her nole ar-every thing and every body. The finuggler and excifeman fat growling at each other, as if they meant to make a farther trial of their manhood. The ferieant talked of his exploits in the wars, and proved his valour by an oath at every word, which his two pupils liftened to with looks of admiration, that flewed they deligned to imitate that part of his example at leaft. The ale-wife lamented the loss of her gin, which, fne faid, the could not replace with any like it on the whole road. In fhort, every body eat and talked ; and talked and eat together, except the girl and her mother, who were quite lolt in altonithment at a feene to new to them, and my mafter, whole thoughts were too much taken up with his own feheme, to mind any thing elfe.

Accordingly, he flepped out when fupper was ended, R 2 and

195 1

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

196

and engaging the chamber-maid in his intereft, by a prefent of half a crown, the thewed him where his mifirefs was to lie, and promifed to fettle all things in the manner most convenient to his defigns, by putting her and her mother in the bed next to the door, there being two in the room, and placing in the other the fervantmaid, who paid for a bed to herfelf, as her modely would not permit her to fleep with a ftranger.

As foon as the house was quiet, and my malter thought the wine which he had forced upon the mother had focured her, he got up, and flealing in his flurt to the door of their chamber, found it open, upon which he entered, and crept to the bed, where he expected to find his militely, without ever confidering what must be the confequence of furprising her in fuch a manner Opening the cartains therefore foftly to feel by the difference of fize on which fide fib. lay, he had fearce put his hand upon the cloaths, when it was feized and gripped fo hard, that he foon loft all thought of every thing but difengaging himfelf.

For this purpole, he made two or three efforts, but finding them ineffectual, and provoked at the pain his hand fuffered in the furuggle, he difcharged a blow with the other full on the face of his antagonift, who fipringing directly out of bed, returned it with fuch ufury, that my poor maker fell fprawling on the floor, where he roared out murder with all his might, in which he was immediately joined by those who lay in the other bed, whose cries not only raifed the house to his refoue, but also faved him from farther violence, his antagonift defising to beat him, in order to make his retreat in time.

When those, who lay nearest, were allowhiled at the doer, half clad, and worfe armed with whatever they could catch up in their confusion, prudential regard to perfonal fafety made them all flop fhort; every one finding fome pretence to excelle himfelf from going in first, and prefing the post of honour upon his neighbour, till they at length raifed their fears to high, that it was uncertain whether any one would venture in before daylight, though the ories still continued, had not the finuggler, who did not wake to join them at first, put an end to the debate. ' Dawn you all, (faid he, fnatching a candle from one, and a poker from another) for a pack of cowardly lubbers! Will you fland javing here, while the people are murdering?' Then rushing in, ' Hallo! (continued he) what's going forward here, in the devil's name ?'

The first object that prefented itself to his view, when he entered, was my master, who was full upon the ground, unable, between fright and beating, to rife. Advancing to him therefore, 'Hip, mefimate! (faid he, giving him a kiek on his naked posteriors) What chear? Speak, if you are alive !'

The entrance of light refloring my maller to fome fpirit, he raifed his head at this falute, and making an effort to get up, 'I fearce know whether I am or net, (anfwered he) I have been fo beaten by that bitch of Babel; but fhe fhall pay for it, if I ever recover.'-----

The place where he was found, directing this accufation to the perfon in that bed, while fonce of them helped him up, the reft gathered round it, and afked the fervant-maid who lay there, what had induced her to treat the gentleman in fuch a manner? But the mention of her name faved her the trouble of a reply. Before file could fpeak, ' It was not fhe! (exclaimed my R 3 mafter) mafter) I mean the old Beldam, mother to the young Witch, whole babby-face brought me among you, and who lay in this bed. It was fhe who abufed me thus; or rather fome porter in woman's cloaths, who paffed for her, for no woman ever had fitch ftrength.

<sup>4</sup> I believe you must be miftaken, Sir, (interposed the exciseman) the people you mean are tying quietly in the next bed, and seem to be as much frighted as you are hurt.<sup>2</sup>-----

' How! (returned my mafter) did they not lie in this bed, next the door ??----

'No, (answered the other) Mrs Margery lies here, as grave and demure, as a whore at a christening.

Then the jade of a chamber-maid played me a trick; (replied my mafter) but who the devil lay with her? For I am fure the was never able to do what I have furthered.

<sup>6</sup> As for that, (faid the actor, who had all the while been peeping round the bed) I believe it will be no hard matter to find it out. These breeches, (pulling a pair from under the bolfter) must belong to fomebody, and will certainly point out her bedsellow, if the lady, hke a true Amazon, did not wear them herself.<sup>5</sup> енар.

198

CHAP. XIV.

The advantage of a ready difurance. The methodifi accounts curiously for what he has done; and turning the tables upon CHEXEAL's master, charges him with robbery, who is thereupon obliged to discover himself, but is contradicted by one of the company, who boasts of a curious acquaintance with him in his own character. He is luckily recognized by a sootman, whose master extricates him from his distress, and makes out the mistakes that had caused for much confusion.

As the breeches were immediately known to belong to the methodift, they marched away directly to his bedfide, for he had not joined them, and afked him how he had come to use the gentleman in that inhuman manner, shewing him my master, whom they had dragged along with them.

• Who I! (answered the methodish, affecting all the furprize of innocence, and determined to deny what he thought could not be proved.) Heaven forbid that I should use any fellow-christian ill. I engage not in such broils. My warfare is with the fpirit.

.

'And fometimes with the fielh too, I believe doctor! (interrupted the actor.) Nay it is in vain to deny it! do you know these breeches, doctor ??----

'Breeches! (exclaimed he, flarting up in real affright, and fumbling under his bolfter) O they are gone! they are gone! I am robbed, ruined, and undone?----

No, doctor, they are not gone, as you fee! But the 200

the quefion is, how they came under the young woman's bed's head, where this gentleman received this abufe.'----

' Let him answer that! (replied the methodil, never at a loss for an impudent lie) let him answer that ! all I know of the matter is this : Being diffurhed in my reft. I then knew not, but now plainly perceive by what caufe, I arofe to pray, as is my cultom, when hearing fomebody go foftly out of the room, I watched, as was my duty, to prevent any evil, and following the footfleps into another chamber caught a man in the very fact of attempting the virtue of fome female, who lay there; upon which expolulating with him on the heinoulness of fuch a crime, he flew at me to furioully that I could fource defend myfelf from him, and if in the fray he received any hart, he must charge it to himfelf. as he was the aggrefior. But this is not the whole! I now perceive, that I was diffurbed out of my fleep, by his finaling my breaches from under my head which he accordingly took with him into the room of that damfel, and therefore I demand jullice against him. for the attempt, as well as for any loss I have fuffered."---Saying this, he took his breeches out of the actor's hand, and fearching the pockets, " It is too true !' continued he, gnafhing his teeth, and wringing his hands in a perfect ageny) ' It is too true l' I am ruined and undene! Lam robbed of all the money which I had collected in my pilgrimage to relieve the poor of the Lord, Twenty golden gainess, belides filver and ather monies. Let him be fearched ! Let every body be fearched this moment. I must have my monty. I must have my money.'

As any malter was a firanger to them all; and not bleffed bleffed with a face that could believe much favour, they began to give credit to the charge againft him, efpecially as the fervant-maid corroborated it, by faying that he had also been runmaging for her pockets, when that worthy gentleman interrupted him (for women and all were now gathered to hear the matter canvaffed) and talked of carrying him before a magistrate in the morning, that he might be fent to jail.

Af another time, fuch a fcene would have given him the higheft pleafure, but he had no tafte for fun now. Enraged therefore at the iniquity of fuch a charge, and the infolence with which they were proceeding to treat him, 'Unhand me, at your perils, you fcoundrels;' (faid he, telling them who he was) 'Unhand me this moment. As for that infamous villain, and his trull, I charge you to fecure them directly, and fend in my name for a magifirate.—I'll make examples of them at leaft?

You may conceive with what furprize they were all ftruck at hearing this. However, as he gave only his bare word for it, all were not equally ready to believe him. 'You, my friend Scapegrace!' (faid the actor, coming and looking him full in the face) 'No no, fir ! Say that to thole who don't know him. I am his intimate companion; his chofen among ten thousand. There is not a fine girl upon the town but we have bilked; nor an house in the hundreds of Drury where we have not kicked up a dust together. He and I are Pylades and Oreftes; fworn friends and brothers. No! no! that fireke won't pass upon me.'

This made matters worfe than ever with my mafter, adding ridicule to infult, which was poured upon him in fuch torrents from every mouth, that he could not fpeak fpeak a word in his own defence. But his diffrefs lafted not long. The fervants of a gentleman, who luckily happened to lie at the inn that night, being raifed by the uproar, one of them knew my mafter through all his diffuifes. 'By your leave there !' (faid he, rathing through the crowd, and fhoving atide fome of them who had already laid hold of him) 'Are you all mad, to ufe a gentleman in this manner ?' Then addreffing himfelf to my mafter, What is the matter, pleafe your honour ? I am forry to fee your honour in fuch a pickle. My mafter (naming him) is in the house, and will do you juftice. 1'll run, and call him up directly.'

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

Such a tellimony infantly turned the feale, and made those who were most infolent to him before, now most officious to pay him respect and attendance. Accordingly he was removed, without asking his leave, into his own room, where they were preparing to humanize his appearance, when the gentleman entered.

Much as my mafter was above the weakness of fhame, he could not avoid feeling fomething like it, on being caught in fuch a condition. He was fitting on the fide of the bed, covered only with the ragged remains of bis fhirt, which had been torn to pieces in the fray, daubed all over with blood and dirt, and beaten to fuch a degree, that he fearce retained one feature of the human face divine, which had not loft all likeness of the original.

The gentleman flarted at fuch a fpectacle, and flopped flort in doubt whether it could be he, till my mafler's voice fatisfied him; when he gave orders to have avery one soncerned in the affair fecured; and then fixing the poor fufficience taken proper cars of, and put to bed, he proceeded to enquire into the matter, the circumflances of which appeared to be thefe.

Digitized by Google

tè

The methodift having agreed with the fervant-maid, his fellow-traveller, to have fome fpiritual converfation with her that night, fhe promified to lie in the bed next the door, and therefore after the chamber-maid had affigned them their quarters, as fhe had fettled with my mafter, feigned fome pretence to defire a change, which the others readily confented to. Accordingly, as the methodift was fecure of his reception, he came foon, and was got into bed to his difciple, when my matter made his attempt, whole hand he feized in the manner I have related ; and would have beaten him fill more feverely for his intrufion, had it not been for his crying out, upon which he retreated to his own bed in fuch an hurry, to cleape detection, that he forgot his breeches." which he had taken with him for fear fome of his chamber-fellows (hould fearch them, and rob him of eight or ten guineas that he had picked up in the course of his preaching about the country, and the actor had made bold to take as lawful prize, when they fell into his hands, and afterwards found means to convey to his wife, for more fecurity.

Every thing being thus cleared up, the gentleman advifed my mafter to drop the affair, as prolecuting it would only expose him still more, to which he willingly agreed, having no inclination for any farther trouble about it.

The methodilt though was far from being to eafily pacified for the lofs of the fruits of his fummer's labour in the vineyard, which he thought worfe of than a thousand beatings, and was refolved to recover, if poffible, in spite of all their fcoss and infults. But the detection

Digitized by GOOgle

201

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

204

detection of the other part of his hiltory, had fo entirely deftroyed his credit, that he found it in vain to perful, effectially as the actor offered to make oath that he had that very evening applied to him, to borrow a fhilling to pay his reckoning. Curfing them all therefore in the bitternefs of his foul, he changed his route, and went upon another preaching progrefs in order to retrieve his lofs, in which pious work he prevailed upon his disciple and fellow-fufferer in fhame, the fervant-maid, whole pockets had escaped the pillagers, to accompany him.

By this time the waggon was ready to fet out, when the reft of the company departed, except the actor and his lady, who were fo tired with that vulgar way of travelling, that they thought proper to continue their journey in the flage-coach; and my mafter, who was laid up in falves and flannels, and had loft both ability and inclination to purfue his enterprize any farther.

CHAP.

CHAP. XV.

CHRYSAL gives a firthing account of his mafter. " He arrives in London, and pays a vifit to bis miftrefs. His curious method of courting. His miftrefs makes bim a prefent of balf her fartune bo-foreband, in return for which be promises to marry ber next day, and then goes to bis girl. Difference in bis behaviour to the two naturally accounted for. An uncommon gueft at a wedding, with as uncommon a manner of celebrating a nubtial-night, flew a still more uncommon instance of matrimonial compliance. CHRYSAL obannes bis Tervice.

THE fingularity of my mafter's character gave me a curiolity to take a view of his life, while he was fleening off fome of the effects of his late adventure. He was born in a rank that supported the fair hopes of honour and advantage, which the first opening of his youth univerfally raifed. But an error in his education blasted all those hopes in the bud, and drove him into every extreme of vice and folly, which it was defigned to guard against.

The bad confequences which are feen to attend in. dulging the paffions too far, often lead weak minds to attempt suppressing them entirely, without confidering that the crime is only in the excels. The difficulty and pain of this attempt throw fuch a gloom over the whole appearance, as hides the native beauty of virtue, and makes it ferm to be the fource of unhappinels, to thole

Vot. IV.

S.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

206

those who view it only in these effects, fo as to tenify them from the purluit of it.

On this error pretended enthuliafts have in every age founded their influence, by enflaving the mind to groundlefs terrors, which they never fail to turn to their own advantage. To the conduct of fuch blind and bafe guides, the mother of my mafter, to whom the fole care of his education had fallen by the death of her hufband, implicitly religned herfelf, and of courfe her fon, in return for which they flattered her fanaticifm and vanity together, with promiles of breeding him up in the perfection of fauchtity.

For this purpole, he was debarred from every innocent recreation, and harraffed with fludies improper for his age. His appetites were mortified with fafting; his reft was broken to chaunt hymns, and pray; nor was he allowed even to fpeak but in foripture-phrafe; and all as the indifpenfible duties of virtue and religion.

Such a flavery naturally gave him fo great an averfion to every thing that bore their names, that the moment he became his own mafter, he placed the fupreme pleafure of his life in acting in contradiction to them, by every inflance of expensive and vicious excefs, in which he fquandered away the inheritance of his anceftors, and broke his conflictuion with a rapidity that gave feandal to vice, put folly out of countenance, and made his name a bye-word in an age of excefles. And in this fituation he was, when I came into his polfeffion.

Though it was near noon before he awoke, the gentleman whofe prefence had fo luckily relieved him the night before, waited to fee him, when he completed his kindness by lending him money to defray his expences up to town, upon which he fent for his equipage, and fet off without farther concern at what had happened.

On his arrival at London, he drove directly to the laft place, which any other man in his circumfiances would have thought of going to. This was the houfe of a lady of large fortune, to whom he had paid his addreffes, fince his extravagance had diffipated his own; and with this peculiar honefty, that he never even pretended a regard to herfeif.

The fuccefs of fuch a court/hip muft appear improbable, but there is no accounting for the caprice of woman. She had taken a liking to him, which feemed to rife in proportion to the flights he flewed her, and was refolved to gratify, if only nominally, for flue could expect no more, at the hazard of every happinels of life.

It may be fuppofed that the fight of him, in fuch a condition, firuck her feverely. She flew to him, threw her arms around his neck, and bemoaned his misfortune in the molt paffionate terms. But that, was not what he wanted. Shaking her off, without feigning the leaft return to her fonduels, ' Pfhn l' (faid he) 'leave off this fluff; and let me know whether you have got the money, I told you I fhould want to pay off thole debts of honour! If you have, and will alfor give me up-the reft of your fortune, without referve, I'll marry you.'

'Will you !' (exclaimed fhe, in rapture) then yess have it, if it were ten times as much. Here it is; (opening a bureau, and reaching him an haudful of banknotes) I fold out half my fortune to raife it the very day you fpoke to me.'

S.2

'I wife

'I wifh I had known that, (faid he, putting the notes in his pocket) and then I might have made my excursion into the country longer. Farewell! 1'll call upon you to-morrow evening, and conclude the job. Do you have the hangman and halter ready.'

"What do you mean ? I don't understand you."

'What flould I mean, but the parfon and the ring. Is not that an halter? And does not he hang us up with it for life!'

'But cant you flay a few moments ! I want to know how you come in that condition !'

'It was only a forape about a wench. I'll tell you the particulars another time. My girl would not forgive me, if flee knew I was fo long in town, without going to her.'

'But will you certainly come to-morrow ? I am sfraid you will difappoint me, now you have got what you wanted.'

'Never fear ! I have not got what I want, while you have a fhilling left in the world.'

Saying which, he walked away without deigning to take any farther leave.

But his behaviour was not fo cavalier where he was going. The moment he entered his miltrefs's room, the flow at him, not with the fondness of a dove. 'Se! (faid the) what bawdy-house have you been breaking up now? You do well to come to me in fuch a pickle; but 1'll fee you damin'd before I take the trouble of nurfing you.'

Don't be in a paffion my love, (faid he, taking her in his arms and giving her a kifs) it is no fuch thing. I fell among a gang of foot-pads, who abuled me in this manner, becaufe I made refiftance.'

"A very

204 '

** A very likely flory truly, invebted I suppose to excufe your not bringing me money ! but if that is the scale, you may go to the devil from whence you came. 1'll not be troubled with your company.'

'No, my dear, I never come to you empty-handed, let me do as I will elsewhere.' With which words he pulled out one of the bank-notes he had just got from the other, and giving it to her, put her at length in a good humeur.

I fee your indignation at a man's acting in fuch a manner; but you could expect no other. The fame -. bafenels of temper which could treat the other woman with infult, naturally fubmitted to be infulted by this. You imagine that his miltrefs must have uncommon attractions, to give her fuch power over him! You " udge right. Her's were uncommon indeed. She had toft her hair and teeth in a falivation; and was allowed to be the most profligate of her profession ; charms fufficient to attach a man of his tafte.

My mafter having thus happily made his peace, the loving couple fat down to their bottle, as ufual : over which happening to mention his intended marriage the next day, her delicacy took fuch offence, that the pofitively refused to confent to it, till he promifed not only that the fhould be prefent, but alfo to return and fpend his wedding-night with her, to prove her triumph over the happy bride.

Accordingly he took her with him the next evening, and introducing her to the expecting fair one. 'I have brought my girl (faid he) to grace our nuptials. The dear creature infifted upon it; and you know I can't refuse her any thing.' The bride elect was fo enraptured at the thought of her approaching happinels, that flie

Digitized by Google

S<sub>3</sub>

the had no fenfe of the infult, but received her with politencis, perhaps not without a mixture of pride on the occalion-

There are fome fcenes, the extravagance of which peggars defeription. I shall therefore only fay, that the behaviour of the company was in character, during the ceremony and entertainment; at the end of which the bridegroom alledging his promife to go back with his miltrefs, the convenient bride not only confented, but allo propoled preparing an apartment for her, in her own house, to fave him that trouble for the future, and procure for herfelf the pleasure of his company; a fcheme that was actually carried into execution, while the had an house to receive, her, which was not very long; a continuance of the same extravagance that had diffipated his own fortune foon diffipating her's alfo.

It may be imagined that I did not remain long in the possibility of such a master. He lost me, the next evening after his marriage, on a bet, that he could repeat the Lord's Prayer, which he laid on purpose to lose, in order to prove how entirely he had got rid of the prejudices of education.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XVI.

CHRYSAL makes some reflections, not likely to be much regarded. His master pays a love wish to a lady, whose father interposes unpolitely, and makes some out-of-the-way objections. CHRYsal's master bits upon a scheme for getting over them. He proposes marriage on certain terms, which are agreed to, and the day fixed at a little distance.

I HAVE on former oscalions given you a fufficient description how people of failion spend their time in gaming-houses, where, though every meeting produces new misfortunes to fome of the company, there is finds a famenels in the manner as will not bear repetition, and mult eloy any creature not abfolistely under infaguation, or obliged to make a trade of it for bready as meither of which was the cafe of my new malter, he left the company early, to purfue pleasures more in his own tafte.

In no inflance are the contradictions in human conduct fo firongly fhewn, as in that of man to woman. He who would lofe his life rather than violate the firicteft principles of honour or honefty (as they are abfardly diffinguished from each other) in his intercourfe with another man, not only fcruples not to fludy deceit, and practife the blackeft and bafeft villsinies againft woman; but will even glory in the fuccefs of them, when accomplished, without fhewing remorfe in himfelf, or meeting reproof from others-tiality to his own caule, which as he has the power of judging in his hands, whether by ulurpation or right, it matters not, makes him pardon in others the crime he would be glad to commit himfelf.

The realon of this is generally faid to be man's partiality

But without exculpating him in the leaft, woman bears an heavy fhare in the blame of her fex's rain. I mean not here by her immediate confent in her own cafe, but by the countenance which fhe fhews to the perpetrators of it, in that of others; it being as certain in faQ, as it is grofs and abfurd to thought, that the fureft recommendation to the general favour of women is the fame of having ruined numbers of them.

Whether this proceeds from a vain ambition of triumphing over the triumpher, or an affectation of difdaining to cloufe the caufe of the fallen, as having forfeited the common regards of humanity, makes no difference in the confequence, whatever it may in the crime, as it opens an opportunity to the fpoiler to extend his conquefts often upon themfelves, in the midft of their fecurity; whereas, would women fhew a true fenfe of the honour of their fex, by refufing every kind of intercourfe with fuch as had ever violated it, man's partiality to himfelf would lofe its effect, and all his defigns upon them be reftrained within the proper boundaries of virtue.

From the place where I came into the pofferfion of my new matter, he went to pay a visit to a young lady of uncommon beauty and merit, whom he was violantly in love with; that is, he was earnefuly bent upon gratifying his defire for her, at the expence of her ruin; an enterprife for which he was eminently qualified, being pofferfied of all the advantages of youth, fortune and addrefs, and absolutely free from every reftraint of principle, principle, as he had proved on feveral fuccefsful occafions of the fame kind. The reception he met flowed that he had made an interest in her heart; but, all his experience in the feience of intrigue could not elude the vigilance of her virtue for a moment, nor find the leaft opening for any attack upon her honour.

Digitized by Google

Such difficulties only redoubled his ardour. As he was confidering therefore next morning how he should proceed, he was interrupted in his meditations by a vifit from his millrefs's father. After fome time spent in common chat, 'I have taken the liberty to wait upon you, Sir, (faid the father) about an affair, the importance of which, to my happinels, will apologize for any forming unpolitonels in it. I have for fome time taken notice of the frequency of your vilits to my house, the honour of which I am justly fensible of, but not fo far dazzled by, but I can fee the motive of them through it; and therefore mult for many reasons beg leave to defire that you will diffeontinue them.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>6</sup> I--I-I don't understand you, Sir; (answered my matter, a good deal disconcerted at so unexpected an address) I have no motive that I defire to conceal, or is any way inconfishent with the character of a gentleman.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Pardon me, Sir, (replied the other) I mean no fuch thing. But yet, what may be thought confiltent with that character in fome things, may be very inconfistent with the happinels of a father. To be plain, Sir, I am not fo unacquainted with the world, but I can fee that all your vifits are paid to my daughter; and as fke is not upon a level with you, either in family or fortune, for a wife, I must repeat my requel, that you will drop drop a pursuit, which must therefore have another view.

'You do injuffice to your daughter, (returned my mafter, recovered from his furprize, and convinced that it was in vain to diffemble any longer) to fay that she is not upon a level with any man alive. I am above the vain pride of family; and as to fortune, my own fatisfies me, without hazarding my happinel's to feek for more.'

'Thefe (faid the lady's father) are truly the fentiments of a gentleman, nor have I any doubt of the fincerity with which you declare them. But there are other confiderations that make it impossible to carry them into execution. You and my daughter profefs different principles of religion; and as I can by no means expect that you shall change your's, fo I hope she is too firmly established in her's; to quit them for any worldly honour or advantage.'

This was a froke my mafter was not prepared for. He acquielced therefore feemingly, with the beft grace he could, to avoid entering more explicitly into the fubject, till he fhould have time to concert measures for getting over this new difficulty, for his honour was now piqued; and he refolved to flop at nothing, if only to punifh the infolence of her father in preluming to forbid him his houfe.

Accordingly, after revolving a variety of fchemes, he fixed upon one which he throught could not fail. Big with this hope, he went next morning to wait upon his miftrefs, notwithflanding the interdiction of her father, and finding her alone, after fome moments of mutual confution on the circumflances of fuch a meeting, ' 1--I--I am come madam, (laid my mafter, helitating, and and bluthing as he fpoke) I am come in confequence of what paffed between your father and me yesterday, of which I prefume he has informed you. It was never my defign to difavow a paffion, upon which depends the happinels of my life. I only waited till fome particular circumstances should enable me to declare it with more convenience. But as he has made the difcovery. that referve is no longer neceffary. If therefore, madam. I can be fo happy as to find favour in your fight, all his objections I prefume will be removed by my offering to marry you directly; on this fole condition, that our marriage shall be kept inviolably secret, till I have accomplished fome affairs, to which you must be fensible the difference of our religions would be a picjudice. The ceremony shall be performed by any clergyman you pleafe, in the prefence of your father, and any other witheffes in whole fecrecy we can confide, and every thing done that can convince you of the fincerity and honour of my attachment. Speak then, deareft madam, and make me happy, by complying with a propofal that has your happines in view, equally with my own.'

Digitized by Google

215

'I fhould be unworthy of the honour you do me, (anfwered fhe, the blufh of true modefly heightening the charms of her beauty) if I could let it interfere with fuperior obligations. When the approbation of my father gives a proper fanction to your application to me, you will probably find no great difficulty in making my inclination go hand in hand with my duty.'

Her father just then entering, relieved her from the embarraliment of any farther conversation upon so delicate a subject; and she withdrew. But my master was was under no fuch difficulty. Encouraged by a reply to favourable to his hopes, be directly repeated his propolal to her father, who promifed him a decifive anfiver next morning.

As the manner of his reception left him no room to soubt of his faceefs, he went again, at the time appointed, when the father gave his confent without difficulty, as did his miftrefs, flipulating only for a flort delay, till fhe fhould return from the wedding of a young lady, her coufin, who lived at fome diffance in the country, and had engaged her to attend her upon that occasion. As he could make no juft objection to this, however difagreeable fufpention of his hopes, he confented with a compliment, that his refolution was too firmly fixed for any time to make him change it, and then took his leave, exulting at the fuccefs of his project.

CHAP. XVII.

CHENNERL'S mafter is privately married. Not fatisfied with one wife for love, be wants another for money. He propofes the matter to his wife, on whofe refufal he difclofes his grand feheme; in which, deep as it is laid. he has the mortification to find himfelf anticipated, and his own weapons surned upon himfelf. Confequence of this difcowery, CHENSAL'S mafter takes a common-method of filencing feandal. CHENSAL changes his fervice.

THE failes of hope make the function of life; as the mind is then too intent upon the object in expectation.

Digitized by Google

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 21%

tion, to fee the inconveniences which afterwards imbitter the enjoyment of it. The ablence of his miftrefs, though confiderably longer than he had apprehended, paffed away pleafantly in the thought of his approaching happiness. As foon as the returned, therefore, he directly claimed the performance of her promife : to which all parties confenting, they were married by his ewn chaplain, in the private manner he defired.

Poffeffed thus of his withen his next care was to enjoy them, with the most convenience to himself. For this purpole, he took an house next to his own ; and enening a fecret communication between them, he removed her thither, as he could not take her directly home without declaring his marriage.

Mortifying as the mysterious appearance of such a fituation must have been to her, she made no objection. but complied implicitly, in that and every thing elfe, as if the had no will but his. Pattions merely fenfual are foon fated. Though the refemblance of this intercourse to an intrigue heightened the pleasure of it, he had not carried it on long, when an opportunity of marrying to great advantage, in the phrase of the world, awoke his anabition, and gave his withes another turn.

After fome little conflict with himfelf, in which the object in view proved too powerful for that in poffelfion, he refolved to break the matter to his wife. Accordingly, as they fat together one morning at breakfait, after some expressions of uncommon tendernels, The regard, which my dearest girl has always shewn for me, (faid he, blufbing at his own baseness as he fpoke) convinces me that fhe will not only take pleafure to hear of any thing to my advantage, but alfo forward it as far as may be in her power.' Т

Vol. IV.

· Ibm

'I hope no action of my life, (answered file, fluggesed at his fpeaking in fisch a manner) fince I have been married to you, has given any reason to doubt either my duty or affection, that you should imagine fisch a preface necessary to introduce whatever you think proper to command.'

'Very true, my deareft life. But-but-but these are force things, the nature of which requires delicacy, even to you, whole underflanding is fuperior to the foibles of your fix. You know the young lady Worthhand! I have received intimation that my addreffer would not be unacceptable to her. Now as her rank and fortune would entitle me to expect the first henours in the flate, I have that confidence in the attachment and love of my deareft girl, as to think that you will not oppose my intereft.<sup>3</sup>......

"As how ?' (replied the eagerly, alarmed at the hint, but unwilling to think fo meanly of him as to underfland it) 'As how ? What interest can you possibly have in her rank and fortune ?'

'The interest which the law gives an husband. Poffeffion ! abfolute possession of the whole'----

"An hufband? Good God! how can that be? Are you not already married?---- <sup>6</sup> True, my dearest life ! but as that marriage is a feeret, if it can be kept fo, it will be no obflacke. You fhall remain, as you are, the wife of my love; and I will be only the hufband of her fortune.<sup>2</sup>---

. How you men, whole minds are fronger, take pleafure in playing with the weaknels of woman ? The very mention of fuch a thing even in jeft, (for it is impossible you can be ferious) firikes me with horror.

'In jeft! I am ferious upon my honour ; and expect your unmediate compliance, as a proof of your duty and affection."

YONE

ADVENTURES OF & GUINEA.

And can you mention honour in the fame breath. with fuch a base proposal ? what a profanation of the word ! But whether you are ferious or not, I must be to on fuch an occasion ; and therefore I declare that I never will facrifice both honour and conficience, by giving what you are pleafed to call a proof of duty and affection, but what would really prove that I had neither.'----

. This romantic foirit, child, much as you think it becomes you, is all thrown away. I am determined : and you mult fubmit. But let me tell you, that on the manner of that fubmiffion depends your future welfare. If you camply properly with my propolal, I will make a fettlement upon you, that shall exceed any expectations you gould naturally have had in life, and remain your huiband, in every thing but the empty name. But if you attempt making the leaft oppolition to my will, I caft you off from this moment to beggary and fame ; nor fhail any late repentance ever bring me to receive you again; to confider the confequence before nou rathly run upon your ruin; I shall expect your final refolution to-morrow."----.

For that you need not wait a moment. I fear no confequence that can attend my doing what is right. The duty of obedience, I have fulfilled in its utmost extent, by immuring myfelf thus, and forfeiting my good name to keep your fecret ; but while my con fcience witneffed for the purity of my heart, I regarded not the prefent centure of the world, no more than I do now, from the fame principles of virtuous refolu-Τ2 tion.

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

220 -

tion, your vain threats, for in fuch a light, the laws of my country enable me to hold them.

'The laws of your country, madam ! Then claim their protection if you pleafe ; but you will find that they afford none to you. Such marriages as your's, between people profeiling different religions, are made woid by those laws; and therefore if you think proper to depend upon them, I give you this notice, that you have nothing to expect from me, but what they shall procure you.

'And was this your motive, (returned the, with a fpirit raifed by indignation) for defiring a private marriage? Impoffible! you could not, cannot be f3 bafe. You only have a mind to try my refelution, which you shall ever find immoveable in this, and every caule of virtue and honour."-----

"Madam, I have no more time to trifle in this manner; therefore once more I defire you to let me know your final determination; for notwithstanding this hehaviour, I still have such a regard for you, that I am unwilling to take an answer which must separate us for ever. Think then, before you fpeak ; and let my making you this generous offer, and preventing your expoling yourfelf in vain, teach you 'a return of proper gratitude.'

' I want not a moment to determine between virtue and vice, infamy and honour."----

'Then take the confequence; and blame yourfelf, when it is too late."----

'I will; if any blame falls on me. And now that I fee you are ferious, in roturn for the notice you have fo generoufly given me, I let you know, that I have obviated the advantage you flatter yourfelf you have over me.

ADVENTURES OF & GUINEA.

the, by conforming legally to your religion before I was married to you."---- Confusion! what is that you fay? When, where, did you conform ?"-----

" When I went to the wedding of my coulin; as you will find upon enquiry, which I advife you to make before you proceed farther in a feheme that can only expose you to worfe infamy than that with which you threatened me.'

"Infernal witch! Was this your love?"-----

' No; it was the prudence of my friends.'

" My love could harbour no doubt of you; but they knew you better; and took this boneft, wife precaution to guard against villainy, which I now am fensible they forefast; and therefore, as you have thought proper to refer me to the law, I now tell you that I will immediately claim its protection, and declare my marriage, nor fuffer any longer in the opinion of the world, by a fecrecy that was enjoined for to bale a purnole ; by which I shall at least have the fatisfaction of faving another woman from falling into the fnare laid for her.

Saying this, fhe flung out of the room to conceal tears, which the thought would betray a weakness unworthy of her, and could no longer refrain.

The nature of my mafter's meditations on this dif. covery may be eafily conceived. He curfed that foolifh fondness, which had thus led him blindfold into his own fnare ; and damn'd all womankind, in revenge for being foiled at his own weapons by one of the fex.

When he had vented his rage in this manner for fome time, a fudden gleam of hope flatter'd him, that what the faid might poffibly have been only the inftantancous taneous laggeltion of refertment and delpair, without being really true. Pleafed with the thought, he fent directly to make the proper enquiry, the refult of which confirm'd the defeat of all his deligns. But this was not the only mortification he fuffer'd. His wife, the moment fhe left him, /went to her father, and difcovering to him her hufband's balenels, he imported her in her refolution of declaring her marriage, as the most proper means to prevent his forming any farther fehemes against her.

Ť 3

The confequence is obvious. The public received fuch a curious piece of fcandal with pleafure; and paid refpect to his wife, if only to fnew contempt for him; particularly the women, who made her's the caufe of the fex, as he had precluded all farther defigns, upon himfelf, by marriage.

This though, however flattering to her vanity and referitment at the time, only widened a breach that the withed to clofe. His pride was piqued to difappoint her defign, as the had his, and he left her to languith out the reft of her life in worfe than widowhood, and repent of the folly of attempting to attach to herfelf a man who the knew had betrayed others of the fex.

As for my mafter, this detection made him defperate. He three off every appearance of regard even to common decency, which he thought could no longer be of use to him, and determined to bear down scandal, by glorying in his vices; in the performance of which gallant resolution, he gave me to a stage-dancer, who gave me to a half-pay officer, who gave me to a tavernkeeper, &c.-Vol. II.

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA. 223

CHAP. XVIII.

CHEVENL gives an account of certain interesting occurrences. An extraordinary definition of a common word. Great expectations disappointed. The confequence of planning in the closet the operations of the field, with the origin of that sagacious practice.

(CHRYSAL's mafter in the course of his journey from VIENNA to LEBON, falls in with one of the armies engaged in carrying on the war.)

<sup>6</sup> The army through which my mafter was obliged to pafs, as I have faid, though paid by England, and the flower of it composed of Britons, was commanded by a German general, in difgraceful acknowledgment of the want of military merit equal to fuch a charge, in the natives.<sup>2</sup>...Vol. II.

Such an indignity to a people ever famed in war, and jealous of their honour, mult appear unaccountable; but the web of human policy is woven in fo myflerious a manner, as to reconcile inconfiftencies fiill harder to be accounted for, on the common principles of reason.

When this army was first formed, the command of it was given to a Briton, whose military abilities had in their opening dawn faved his country from ruin, and now in their meridian promifed to raise his name to an equality in glory, with those of most renown, in the long lift of heroes; but the wildom of those measures by which the world is governed, defeated expectations to justly founded, and deprived his country for ever of the advantage of fuch abilities.

As the profeffed defign of this army was only to ob-

Digitized by Google

Ŧ

244

CHRYSAL: OB, THE

ferve the motions of the French, and defend the allies of England from their attacks, it was judged fufficient to make it barely of fuch a force as might effect that defence, with the affiftance of those allies themfelvess Though an inferior army may act fuccefsfully on the defentive in repelling an immediate affault upon itfelf, yet where its attention is extended to the defence of diffant objects, the neceffity of dividing fuch inferior firength enhances the diffroportion, fo as not only to defeat the delign, but alfo often to involve the defenders in the ruin they were meant to avert from others.

The danger of fuch an event was evident in the prefent cafe, but fome divisions in the English councils made it impossible to obviate it, by making the force of the army equal to the end it was appointed for; certain patriots having opposed the forming of any army at all, with fo plausible and popular arguments, that the fovereign was obliged to be fatisfied for the prefent, with the shadow of one, as I may fay, in expectation of being able to reinforce it, by degrees, as the patriots expected to make their compliance with fuch a measure, the means for gaining the end of their patriotism, that is, raising themselves to power.

You feem furprized at my calling men, who could act with fuch a view, and oppole a measure, which I have faid to be founded on every motive of honour and juffice, by the respectable name of patriots. But in this, as in very many other things, the name remains after the idea it was defigned to represent is loss. Patriotism, that once meant the noblest exertion of disinterested virtue, by which every attention to private advantage was facrificed to the public good, fignifies now no more than an opposition to the measures of government, whether right or wrong, supported by such pretences tences as are most likely to inflame the paffions of the people, till the governors are fo embarrafied, as to be obliged to admit the patriots to a fhare of their power, when they directly throw of the mafk for fome other to take up; and do themfelves the very things which they before declaimed against with fuch noise and vehemence. By this general description I do not absolutely preclude a few particular exceptions; nor deny the merit of fome men, who even in modern times have deferved the name, in all the honour of its original meaning.

Digitized by GOOgle

ADVENTURES OF A GUINEA.

The nature of fuch a command, and the improbability of its fuccels, would have deterred any man from accepting it, who was not actuated by principles fo truly patriotic, as to make him difregard every other motive, for the mere poffibility of ferving his country.

As the abilities of the general often make up for the weakness of an army, the Britons under his command confiding in him, looked upon the fuperior force of their enemies with pleafure, as promiting him the greater glory. Nor was this confidence without foundation: he had led them to victory before, when they fearce deferved the name of regular forces; and had fince, with unwearied care, affilted their native valour with every advantage of the most judicious discipline. Under fuch a commander therefore, what might not fuch troopshope to do? But a difficulty still more distretting than the inferiority of his force difappointed all those hopes.

Military operations are fo complicated, that every motion of an army requires a correlpondent one, in that oppofed to it. The obvious trath of this flews the fagacity of planning in the closet, the operations of the field. Particular objects indeed may be propoled; but the method of accomplishing them must be left to the judgment of the commander, as occasion may direct, it being being abfolutely impossible to forefee, and provide for all the inflantaneous contingencies, which must make an immediate deviation from any fystem, that could have been laid down, indiffenfably 'neceffary. Where this differentiary power is abridged, and the motions of a General marked out for him, it must be from the fault of his adversaries, if he performs any thing of confsquence.

225

Digitized by GOOG

226

The sirft who introduced this fcheme of flackling a commander were churchmen, who, puffed up by the power which their influence over the weaknefs of prinses gave them, dildained to appear incapable of any thing; and therefore, as their want of military know. ledge would not permit their undertaking the actual command of armies, they took this method of flewing their abilities and authority, by directing how the commanders of them flould proceed; a method, however abfurd in itfelf, fo flattering to human felf-lufficiency, that princes adopted it after, when age or infirmity prevented their leading their forces in the field.

CHAP. XIX,

Continued: The natural event of fueb a fituation. The General wistorious over himfelf, quits the purfuit of military glory for the practice of the wirtues of peace. Perfidy of the enemy juftly punifhed. The army is formed again under the command of a GERMAN, and a fugar-plumb groon to the ENGLASH to flop their months at fuch an infult.

DISTRESSED more by directions of this kind than even by the weaknefs of his army, the Britilh general took the field, rather in obedience to his duty than from from any hope of fuccels, and literally to obferve the motions of an enemy whom he was able to oppole.

ADVENTURES 'of A GUINEA.

227

The event was as he forefaw. The enemy fuperior in firenoth, and at liberty to feize every advantage, while he could only act in confequence of orders given at a diftance, and impolithle to be always proper, foon turned his attention from the defence of others to the prefervation of his own army. But even this, the circum-Stances he was in made it impeffible for all his judgement and intrepidity to effect, though displayed in a manner that made his name immortal, otherwise than by giving up the countries he was fent to defend on the best terms he could procure, and difarming his own troops:

Mortifying as fach a necessity must have been to an heart panting for glory, his conduct under it reflected move real honour upon him than any victory gained againft probability, at the imminent hazard of the lofs of his whole army could have done, as it shewed that he was fuperior oven to the defire of fame, when clafhing with the intereffs of his country.

But they who had driven him to this neceffity, by difabling him from purfining the dictates of his ewa judgment, thought proper to view his conduct in another light, and centure in him their own errors. The honsft indignation of confeious. virtue could not brook treatment fo difingenuous. In justice to himself therefore, here figned all military command ; and quitting the professions of arms for ever, devoted the remainder of his days to the practice of every virtue of prace.

As to the countries which had been thus difappointed from defending, their troubles ended not fo cafily. The

Digitized by GOOgle J

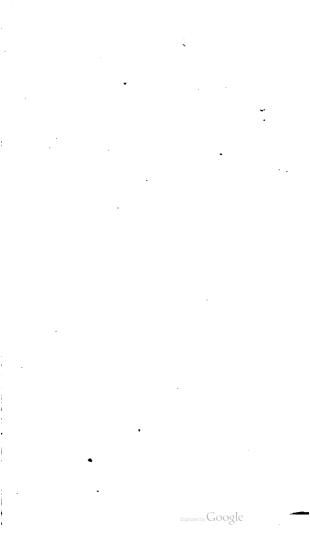

CHRYSAL: OR, THE

The enemy, in the infolence of power, foon broke through the terms on which they had been given up, and treated the army that had fubmitted on the fecurity of public faith, with every inflance of the molt fagrant injuffice.

All obligations are mutual. The breach of one party therefore difengages the other. Provoked by fuch perfidy, the injured army joined the natives, and arole with all the fury of revenge upon their oppressors. Such attacks are not to be refifted. The tyrants were driven out of all their conqueits; and, to prevent their recovery of them, the army was formed again of force fufficient to accomplish the end proposed; and the command of it given to a German of proved abilities, free from the restrictions which had made those of the late commander of no effect, his mifcarriage having shewn the absurdity of them; and the English patriots, who had before opposed the raising any fuch army, having fucceeded in their views of getting into power, and now aiding the defign with all their influence; ' though to palliate their difgrace, and to fatisfy the jealouly of the English, they had the imaginary privi. lege of being immediately under a commander of their own, and fubject only to their own laws, in all things except the operations of the war, when they were of neceffity to obey the German commander in chief,'---Vol. II.

;;Google

Digitized by Google

